Where plaintiff's claim was barred by failure to assert it in previous litigation between parties, error of trial court in striking entire testimony of witness would not require reversal of plaintiff's judgment.
N.Y.—Beldac Realty Corp. v. Shaffer, 146 N.Y.S.2d 310.

On motion of court

(1) Where an objection to a witness' answer is sustained, it is not reversible error for court to strike the objectionable answer on its own motion.
Cal.—Bank of America Nat. Trust & Sav. Ass'n v. O'Shields, 275 P.2d 153, 128 C.A.2d 212.

(2) Trial court did not commit prejudicial error, on its own motion, in striking complex questions which had gone unanswered and which witness had asked counsel to repeat.
Cal.—Church v. Payne, 97 P.2d 819, 36 C.A.2d 382.

Evidence held not in effect stricken

Where trial court merely found that testimony of defendant's expert witnesses was outweighed by testimony of plaintiffs' experts, defendant could not complain that trial court in effect struck the testimony of defendant's experts.
Wash.—Clifford v. State, 148 P.2d 302, 20 Wash.2d 527.

In equity

Error, if any, in striking testimony in an equity case is not reversible error, as the appellate court will read it as though not stricken.

to rule on[25] a motion to strike evidence will not constitute ground for reversal where the party complaining has not been prejudiced thereby.

Thus, it has been held that error in striking testimony is not prejudicial, where the evidence, or its substance, was subsequently admitted,[26] where there is other adequate testimony to the same facts,[27] where the evidence in no way inured to the benefit of the party complaining,[28] where the matter stricken was subsequently conceded,[29] where the complaining party might have elicited the testimony by another question[30] or on redirect examina-

Answer prior to objection

Where an objection to a witness' answer is sustained but no motion to strike is made, it is not reversible error for court not to strike answer given prior to objection.

b. Withdrawing

A judgment will not be reversed for harmless error in ruling on motions to withdraw evidence.

An erroneous ruling on a motion to withdraw evidence will not be ground to reverse, where the complaining party suffered no substantial prejudice,[49] but such an error constitutes ground for reversal where it results in substantial prejudice.[49.5]

§ 1720. Failure to Rule on Objections to Evidence

In the absence of prejudice to the complaining party, error in failing to rule on objections to evidence is not ground for reversal.

Failure to rule on objections to evidence is not ground for reversal where no prejudice results to the complaining party,[50] as for instance where the court fails to rule on an objection to competent evidence,[51] or where in a chancery case it did not appear that a consideration of the testimony was necessary to a decree for the successful party.[52] Whether a failure to make such a ruling is harmless depends on the particular circumstances of the case,[52.5] but the error will be considered harmless unless substantial injury results.[52.10]

10. Rulings in Respect to Witnesses

§ 1721. Examination and Rulings as to Competency

Erroneous rulings as to the competency of witnesses do not constitute ground for reversal unless substantial injury resulted to the party complaining.

The rulings of the trial court as to the competency of witnesses are usually final and will not be disturbed by the appellate court except in clear cases of abuse of discretion resulting in prejudice to the complaining party.[53] Accordingly, a ruling as to the competency of a witness on the question of value, made when no question was pending and merely anticipating counsel, was not prejudicial to defendant,[54] and submitting to the jury the question of the competency of a witness for plaintiff is not prejudicial to defendant where the witness is clearly competent.[55]

Error in permitting an incompetent witness to testify may not be ground for reversal where no substantial injury resulted to the party complaining,[56] as where the testimony was immaterial,[57] not in dispute,[58] such as would probably not influence the jury,[59] or where the case or the issue was tried before the court without a jury.[60] Also, error in permitting an incompetent witness to testify may be harmless where the witness subsequently obviated any prejudicial effect by his explanation in testifying to the same matter;[61] or where the testimony was in substantial accord with that produced by the objecting party,[62] or was conceded by

Qualifications of expert witness

(1) Qualifications of expert witness are to be determined by trial judge, and his determination will not be disturbed where it is supported by evidence, unless shown to be clearly erroneous as a matter of law.

Accepted as expert

The exclusion of testimony in qualifying witness as an expert, if erroneous, was harmless, where the witness was accepted as an expert.

tions have been answered is not reversible in absence of motion to strike answers given to the questions.[73]

Where it does not appear that a witness, rejected as incompetent, knew or could testify to anything relevant to the issue on trial, such rejection, although erroneous, is not ground for reversal.[74]

Reversible error. The rulings of the trial court in permitting[75] or refusing to permit[75.5] a witness to testify, or permitting him to refuse to testify,[76] when erroneous and clearly prejudicial, constitute ground for reversal.

§ 1722. Credibility, Impeachment, Contradiction, and Corroboration

Harmless error in admitting or excluding evidence bearing on the credibility, impeachment, contradiction, or corroboration of a witness is not ground for reversal.

Error in admitting incompetent evidence in support of the credibility of a witness is harmless where the verdict is in contradiction of the witness' testimony.[77]

Admission of incompetent impeaching evidence. The admission of incompetent evidence, for the purpose of impeaching a witness, may, under the circumstances, be prejudicial and thus constitute ground for reversal.[78] Nevertheless, error in admitting or excluding evidence bearing on the credibility, impeachment, contradiction, or corroboration of a witness is not ground for reversal.

Method of impeachment

The asking of irrelevant questions, insinuating that a litigant-witness is a person of bad character, tending to degrade him and thus prejudice him in the eyes of the jury, is not an approved method of impeaching the witness' credibility, and on objection it may be the cause of a reversal.

Contents of letter

In suit for compensation, where the only part of a letter from defendant's bookkeeper to its president tending to impeach the bookkeeper's testimony, for which the letter was offered, was admitted in evidence, that the court permitted plaintiff to interrogate the bookkeeper as to the letter before the part was admitted was no ground for reversal.

Correction of deposition

In action for injuries to passenger in defendant's bus, driven by codefendant, as result of collision with third defendant's automobile at street intersection, admission of bus driver's testimony, on examination by plaintiff's counsel, that statement in witness' deposition as to how near automobile was when he first saw it was corrected immediately afterwards by increasing distance, was not reversible error, although corrected statement was not impeaching because deponent had right to correct deposition.
Cal.—Paul v. Key System, 180 P.2d 940, 80 C.A.2d 21.

Explanation not before jury

Trial court's ruling relating to privilege of witness to explain how he came to make prior statements concerning automobile accident was not prejudicial where the explanation was not made before the jury.

the answer denied the existence of the facts which would tend to impeach the witness;[80] where the deposition of the witness impeached was excluded,[81] or the impeaching evidence was treated as ruled out;[82] where a party against whom improper impeaching evidence was admitted testified to substantially the same facts as shown by the impeaching evidence;[83] where the testimony of the witness impeached was not beneficial to the party complaining;[84] where the matter relied on for the purpose of impeaching the witness was satisfactorily established by other and competent evidence;[85] where the matters testified to by the impeached witness were sufficiently established by other evidence;[86] where the matter in respect to which the witness was contradicted was immaterial;[87] where the complaining party could easily have cured the error through the introduction of testimony;[88] where the verdict is clearly right on the whole evidence and is fully supported by competent evidence;[89] or where the attempted impeachment failed or was unsuccessful.[90]

Exclusion of competent impeaching evidence. Error in excluding evidence competent to impeach a witness will not operate to reverse where it is apparent that no prejudice resulted therefrom.[91] Accordingly, where there was a clear preponderance of evidence in favor of the party for whom the witness it was desired to impeach was testifying;[92] where the testimony of the witness sought to be impeached was not accepted by the jury in whole or in part;[92.5] where the issue on which the wit-

Failure to make avowal

Refusal to permit defendant to contradict his own witness by introducing evidence that witness had made a statement previous to trial contradictory to testimony given by him at trial, was error, but not reversible where defendant failed to make an avowal to what witness would have testified had he been permitted to answer the question.

Ky.—Wilson v. Dalton's Adm'r, 223 S.W.2d 978, 311 Ky. 285.

Testimony on former trial

In absence of a showing of a material variance between plaintiff's present testimony and testimony at former trial, there was no prejudicial error in refusing defendant the right to use testimony given in former trial involving same accident, for purposes of impeachment.

S.C.—Anderson v. Elliott, 90 S.E.2d 367, 228 S.C. 371.

Question of complete denial of statement

Where plaintiff sought to contradict his own witness by introduction of a statement signed by witness, and there was a fair question whether there was such a complete denial by witness as to make any part of statement competent, excluding statement was not reversible error.

ness was sought to be impeached was immaterial,[93] or was in substantial harmony with that of unattacked witnesses, and was uncontradicted;[94] where the impeaching evidence was subsequently received;[94.5] where the matter with respect to which the witness was to be impeached was cumulative;[94.10] where the facts sought to be established by such evidence were admitted;[95] or where the facts by which the witness was sought to be impeached were otherwise brought out.[96]

On the other hand, the exclusion of competent impeaching evidence, which is prejudicial to the complaining party, is not harmless error.[97] Accordingly, it has been held that the exclusion of competent, impeaching testimony is reversible error where the testimony of the parties to the suit is directly conflicting,[98] where the testimony on the issue relating to which the witness is offered is unsupported by other evidence,[99] where the witness does not admit making the statements attributed to him,[99.5] where the case of the party sought to be impeached rested on vague and unsatisfactory testimony,[1] or where the case turns on the reputation of defendant and his witness for veracity.[2]

Failure to lay foundation for impeaching evidence. The admission of impeaching evidence without laying a foundation therefor will not operate to reverse where no prejudice resulted therefrom,[3]

Impeaching own witness
In negligence action for injuries, where defendant called plaintiff's wife as witness in effort to contradict plaintiff's testimony, and wife's testimony turned out to be favorable to plaintiff, excluding letters previously written by wife which contained statement inconsistent with her testimony was reversible error, since statute authorizes a party to introduce proof that his own witness has made prior statement inconsistent with his or her testimony, providing that such prior inconsistent statement is in writing and subscribed by witness.

Exclusion of foundation for impeachment
The exclusion of questions asked to lay a foundation for the impeachment of the witness by proof of contradictory statements made at another trial is not prejudicial where the witness admitted that, if the record on the other case was as stated to him by counsel, he would concede that he testified that way, and where a comparison of the record showed no substantial conflict.
Mo.—Jablonowski v. Modern Cap Mfg. Co., 279 S.W. 89, 312 Mo. 173.

as where the witness sought to be impeached subsequently goes on the stand and has full opportunity to explain or to contradict the impeaching testimony,[4] where the answer of the impeaching witness is a denial of any knowledge of the matter relied on for impeachment,[5] or where the substance of the impeaching testimony has been previously given without objection.[6] Also, the exclusion of impeaching testimony because of the failure to lay the proper foundation, if error, is harmless,[7] as where such testimony is subsequently admitted after the foundation is properly laid.[7.5]

However, the admission of impeaching evidence without laying a foundation therefor is prejudicial error where the right of recovery of the complaining party depends on the testimony impeached,[8] where the issues are sharply drawn,[9] or where the impeaching testimony goes to the very heart of the controversy.[10]

Matters as to which foundation laid. The failure to establish the impeachment of a witness on all matters as to which a foundation was laid is not reversible error.[10.5]

Qualifying impeaching witness. Although questions to qualify impeaching witnesses were improperly allowed, yet, if they elicited proper testimony, there was no error in allowing it to stand.[11]

Corroborative evidence. The erroneous admission of evidence in corroboration of the testimony of an unimpeached and uncontradicted witness and in respect to a mere matter of detail is not a ground for reversal.[12] Likewise, the erroneous exclusion of corroborative evidence is not reversible error where the testimony sought to be corroborated was not denied.[13] The erroneous admission of evidence in corroboration of a contradicted or discredited witness may be harmless in view of other similar testimony.[13.5] Error in permitting plaintiff's attorney to corroborate the testimony of one of plaintiff's witnesses is not a ground for reversal.[13.10]

Recall for impeachment. Whether a witness shall be recalled for impeachment rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, whose action will not be reviewed on appeal unless abuse of discretion appears.[14]

§ 1723. Refreshing Memory

In the absence of prejudice to the complaining party error in refusing or permitting a witness to refresh his recollection by referring to memoranda is not a ground for reversal.

Error in permitting a witness to refer to books, memoranda, or data, for the purpose of refreshing his memory will not be ground for a reversal where no prejudice results.[15] This rule has been applied where it appears that the witness testified or could testify, from memory, independently of the data, to practically the same facts shown thereby;[16] where the matter testified to is immaterial;[17] where the books or memoranda to which the witness referred were subsequently produced in evidence[18] or were available for inspection;[18.5] where other witnesses testified to substantially the same facts as did the witness who used the memoranda;[19] where the witness was exhaustively cross-examined with reference to his testimony and it does not appear that the witness actually made use of the memorandum to which the judge permitted him to refer;[20] where the error was cured by the findings;[20.5] or where the issue as to which the witness testified was withdrawn from the jury.[21]

Further, error in refusing to permit a witness to refresh his memory will not operate to reverse where no prejudice results,[22] as where the matters as to which he testified were immaterial,[22.5] where the matters testified to were sufficiently established by other evidence,[22.10] where there was no showing that the witness required any refreshing of memory and witness affirmatively testified he remembered the incident inquired about,[23] where it appeared that the witness had sufficiently refreshed his memory by reading the data before testifying,[24] or where the entries from which it was sought to have the witness refresh his memory had already been read to the jury and were before them as evidence.[25]

11. Admission of Evidence

§ 1724. Prejudicial Effect in General

a. When harmless
b. When prejudicial
c. As affected by evidence actually admitted and particular circumstances
d. In particular types of action and with respect to particular matters

a. When Harmless

Error in admitting evidence is not ground for reversal when it was not, or could not have been prejudicial or harmful to the complaining party.

Error in the admission of evidence is not ground for reversal where it was not, or could not have been, prejudicial[25.50] or harmful to the party com-

Technical and theoretical errors and errors not involving injustice

(1) Errors assigned on admission of evidence, which are technical and not fundamental, and are harmless in view of the entire record, will not cause a reversal.

Fla.—City of Jacksonville v. Vaughn, 110 So. 529, 92 Fla. 339.

(2) The admission of testimony, not technically proper in the form in which it was offered, was harmless, where it was not apparent that any material injury resulted to appellant from its admission.

Md.—Penn Oil Co. v. Triangle Petroleum & Gasoline Co., 111 A. 482, 136 Md. 559.

(3) Every theoretical error in the admission of evidence is not ground for reversal, and mistakes which do not involve injustice should ordinarily be disregarded.

U.S.—Missouri Valley Bridge & Iron Co. v. Blake, Va., 231 F. 417, 145 C.C.A. 411.

Where no motion to exclude and evidence not prejudicial

A case will not be reversed because of permitting improper testimony, where there was no motion to exclude, and the evidence was not prejudicial.

Ala.—Aiken v. McMillan, 106 So. 150, 213 Ala. 494.

Statement of wrong ground for admission

(1) Admission of evidence otherwise competent is not prejudicial error because the ground authorizing its reception is erroneously stated.

Cal.—Davis v. Tanner, 262 P. 1106, 88 C.A. 67.

(2) Admission of evidence which was admissible as declaration against interest, on wrong theory that evidence was part of res gestæ, did not constitute prejudicial error.

Ohio.—Anderson v. City Cab Co., App., 38 N.E.2d 214.

Criminal convictions; impeachment of witness

Supreme court of appeals on appeal will not consider admission of evidence in civil case of former criminal convictions of witness for purpose of impeaching credibility of witness, reversible error, unless trial court has clearly abused its discretion.

Failure to make stereotyped proffer

Where traced copy of map of lands involved in boundary dispute was presented in open court and identified as correctly depicting property, and was noted as evidence and referred to by witnesses, and complainant testified that original map and copy correctly portrayed properties involved, fact that defendant did not make stereotyped proffer of introducing map in evidence could not result in prejudicial error, since tenor of its proffer was immaterial.

of the cause have been fairly tried in the court below, rulings on the admission of evidence, if erroneous, are harmless.[56.10] Where plaintiff fails to sustain the burden that is on him in the case, no occasion arises for defendant to introduce evidence, so that any error in the admission, for defendant, of testimony from an incompetent witness is not prejudicial.[56.15] No prejudice can result from the reception in evidence of a writing the contents of which have been shown by testimony previously given.[56.20]

b. When Prejudicial

Error in admitting evidence apparently affecting the jury in reaching a verdict, or affecting the result or outcome of the trial, is prejudicial and reversible.

Where, during the trial of a cause, evidence that is not germane to the issues involved creeps into the record, it becomes the duty of an appellate court to determine whether the error is prejudicial to any of the parties involved.[56.50] It has been said to be well settled that the admission of incompetent evidence is prejudicial error.[56.55]

Error in the admission of evidence which apparently, or probably, affected or influenced the jury in their verdict, or affected the result or outcome of the trial, is prejudicial and is ground for reversal.[57]

4 C.J. p 972 note 70.

Testimony as to defendant's wealth

N.Y.—Gray v. Eisemann, 80 N.Y.S.2d 43.

Effect on result

(1) If error existed in the admission of evidence which may have contributed to cause the verdict actually returned, the error is not harmless.

Tex.—Albright v. Smith, Com.App., 288 S.W. 178, reversed on other grounds Allbright v. Smith, Com. App., 5 S.W.2d 970.

(2) Admission of improper testimony is ground for reversal, unless it reasonably appears certain that the result would have been the same had it not been admitted.

Tex.—Ferguson v. Ferguson, Com. App., 23 S.W.2d 673.

Intent of introduction

Tex.—Walker v. Kellar, Civ.App., 218 S.W. 792.

Possible use

Admission of incompetent evidence having a possible harmless purpose is not harmless error where susceptible of a legally harmful use.

N.H.—Piechuck v. Magusiak, 135 A. 534, 82 N.H. 429.

Prevention of fair trial

Evidence improperly admitted, which may have prevented a fair trial, cannot be held harmless.

Ky.—Dawson v. Shannon, 9 S.W.2d 998, 225 Ky. 635.

Okl.—White v. Burton, 71 P.2d 694, 180 Okl. 499.

Weight of evidence

(1) Appellate court, in determining whether or not error is prejudicial, should not attempt to weigh erroneously admitted testimony, but should merely decide whether or not it could have been given weight by jury, and

This rule has been applied, among other instances, to evidence objected to as not the best evidence,[58] to extrajudicial statements and declarations,[59]

if it could, it automatically follows that it was prejudicial.
N.J.—Ferry v. Settle, 78 A.2d 260, 6 N.J. 254.

(2) In determining whether improperly admitted and potentially prejudicial evidence prejudices appellant or whether substantial justice has been done, reviewing court should not weigh other evidence or determine credibility and effect of conflicting evidence, unless weight, credibility, and effect of that evidence are substantially in favor of appellee.
Ohio.—Bachtel v. Bachtel, 127 N.E.2d 761, 97 Ohio App. 521.

Plaintiff's testimony at former trial
Ga.—Cantrell v. Byars, 30 S.E.2d 643, 71 Ga.App. 287.

Impeachment of witness
Mo.—City of Gallatin ex rel. Dixon v. Murphy, App., 217 S.W.2d 400.

Whether prejudice must appear
(1) According to one view, error in admitting evidence is not cause for reversal, in the absence of a showing of prejudice.
Ind.—Columbia Grocery Co. v. Schlesinger, 200 N.E. 414, 102 Ind. App. 617.
Ky.—Brown v. Weathers, 57 S.W.2d 4, 247 Ky. 306.
Okl.—Martin v. Arnold, 247 P.2d 517, 207 Okl. 69—White v. Burton, 71 P.2d 694, 180 Okl. 499.

(2) In accordance with this view it is held that, in order that error in the admission of evidence shall constitute reversible error on the ground of the immateriality of such evidence alone, it must be made to appear that the evidence was clearly irrelevant, and prejudice must be made to appear.
Vt.—In re Wells' Will, 113 A. 822, 95 Vt. 16.

(3) Incompetent evidence, to cause reversal, must be shown to have been prejudicial to the objector.
Okl.—Hillery-Atkins Buick Co. v. Cox, 262 P. 694, 128 Okl. 234.

(4) Admission of incompetent evidence will not require reversal unless it affirmatively appears that such admission caused prejudice to objecting party.
Okl.—City of Bethany v. Municipal Securities Co., 274 P.2d 363—Martin v. Arnold, 247 P.2d 517, 207 Okl. 69—Colonial Royalties Co. v. Hinds, 216 P.2d 958, 202 Okl. 660.
Wis.—Voss v. Metropolitan Cas. Ins. Co., 63 N.W.2d 96, 266 Wis. 150.

(5) Mere fact that irrelevant evidence is admitted over objection and subject to exception, in and of itself, does not require vacation of decision against objecting party whether trier of facts be jury, judge, or referee; before a decision will be disturbed for erroneous reception of evidence, it must appear that objecting party was prejudiced thereby.
Me.—Lipman Bros. v. Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co., 100 A.2d 246, 149 Me. 199.

(6) Further, it is held that the admission of incompetent evidence is prejudicial unless it appears, without weighing the evidence, that it could not have prejudiced the complaining party's rights.
N.D.—Huston v. Johnson, 151 N.W. 774, 29 N.D. 546.

(7) Admission of evidence to support an immaterial matter in the petition was not ground for reversal, where it did not appear that defendant was prejudiced thereby.
Neb.—Larson v. Central Nat. Fire Ins. Co. of Illinois, 154 N.W. 721, 98 Neb. 845.

(8) On the other hand, there exists the view that admission of illegal evidence over objection is a cause for setting aside the verdict, unless the absence of prejudice is clearly shown.
W.Va.—Dalton v. Martin, 136 S.E. 47, 102 W.Va. 595.

(9) In accordance with this view, it is held that judgment will be reversed when improper testimony, properly excepted to, has been received, unless it is apparent verdict was not affected thereby.
N.Y.—Wurtzman v. Kalinowski, 251 N.Y.S. 328, 233 App.Div. 187.

(10) Where it does not appear from record that evidence wrongfully admitted in jury trial did not affect result of trial unfavorably to party against whom it was admitted, its reception must be considered prejudicial error.
Neb.—Application of Burt County Public Power Dist., 77 N.W.2d 773, 163 Neb. 1—Higgins v. Loup River Public Power Dist., 68 N.W.2d 170, 159 Neb. 549—State v. Cheyenne County, 60 N.W.2d 593, 157 Neb. 533—Borden v. General Ins. Co. of America, 59 N.W.2d 141, 157 Neb. 98.

(11) "When incompetent evidence which may be prejudicial is received, the verdict is set aside, without proof that the jury gave it any weight in reaching the verdict. To require the losing party to prove actual prejudice would place a difficult and unjust burden on him. Error having been committed, in any event it must be shown to be harmless."
N.H.—Daniels v. Barker, 200 A. 410, 415, 89 N.H. 416.

Clear prejudice
(1) Erroneous rulings on evidence constitute ground for reversal only when clearly prejudicial.
Minn.—In re Paulson's Estate, 150 N.W. 914, 128 Minn. 277.

(2) Introduction of inadmissible evidence, either on direct or cross-examination, unless it is so clearly prejudicial that its ill effects cannot be removed by its exclusion, is not ground for a mistrial.
Ga.—United Motor Freight Terminal Co. v. Hixon, 47 S.E.2d 171, 76 Ga.App. 653.

Probable prejudice and necessity for showing objection
One complaining of alleged error in admitting evidence must show that he objected to the admission of such evidence, and, although the evidence is inadmissible, error is harmless, unless it probably prejudiced the objector.
Okl.—Healdton Oil & Gas Co. v. Regnier, 39 P.2d 973, 170 Okl. 271.

Substantial prejudice
To justify reversal for the erroneous admission of testimony, it must have caused substantial prejudice to appellant.

of parol evidence,[62] ordinances,[62.5] and self-serving declarations.[62.10] Admitting in evidence, after the jury have retired and over a party's objection, an exhibit not offered during the trial has been held prejudicial error.[62.15]

Where evidence is objected to as irrelevant, the action of the trial court in receiving it will not be reversed, unless it can be seen that the evidence is of no weight whatever in determining the issue.[62.20] In a close case, it is reversible error to admit testimony, offered in order to bolster and corroborate a witness, that on other occasions he has made statements out of court conforming to his testimony in court.[62.25]

c. As Affected by Evidence Actually Admitted and Particular Circumstances

(1) Nature of evidence complained of, and purpose for which offered

(2) Operation and effect of admission

(3) Circumstances of particular case

(1) Nature of Evidence Complained of, and Purpose for Which Offered

Error in the admission of evidence may be harmless by reason of its nature, as where it is merely cumulative or is of little or no importance.

Error in the admission of evidence may not constitute ground for reversal where the evidence which has been admitted is not controlling,[62.60] or is without probative force,[63] or of little[63.5] or no[63.10] weight. Likewise, unless the evidence has, or may have, influenced the result, as discussed infra subdivision c (2) of this section, error in admitting evidence is not reversible where the evidence is merely corroborative[64] or where it is cumulative

Technical error
Mass.—Bendett v. Bendett, 52 N.E.2d 2, 315 Mass. 59.

Absence of other evidence
Contention that admission of evidence did not constitute reversible error on ground that evidence was merely cumulative would not be sustained where there was no other evidence to sustain the judgment.
Cal.—Fritz v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 123 P.2d 622, 50 C.A.2d 570.

Departure from strict rules of evidence
Where evidence is offered by one party for purpose of corroborating his own witness or contradicting the witness of his adversary, and such evidence is merely cumulative, departure from strict rules of evidence will not be held reversible error unless it appears that prejudice to the complaining party has manifestly resulted.
N.C.—Talley v. Dairymen's Creamery, 7 S.E.2d 502, 217 N.C. 255.

Absence of objection
(1) Admitting certain evidence, if error, was held to be harmless in a particular case because merely cumulative of other evidence not objected to.
Mo.—Green v. American Ry. Express Co., App., 34 S.W.2d 1039.

(2) Any error in permitting witness to read the date of a lease in evidence as corroborative of the date of a partnership dissolution was harmless, where similar testimony was previously admitted without objection.
Tex.—Johnson v. Ashby, Civ.App., 18 S.W.2d 726.

Argument, inference, and opinion
Admission of testimony made up of argument, inference, and opinion, and therefore improper, did not warrant reversal where merely cumulative and the question which elicited such testimony was too general.
Md.—American Stores Co. v. Herman, 171 A. 54, 166 Md. 312.

Conceded point
It was not prejudicial error to admit improper evidence, which was merely cumulative of uncontradicted evidence on a point practically conceded.
Cal.—Barrios v. Pacific States Trading Co., 183 P. 236, 41 C.A. 637.

Matter of trifling importance
Where a statement as to a matter of trifling importance was, through another witness, already before the jury without objection by appellant, its cumulative admission was not prejudicial.
Ala.—Sovereign Camp, W. O. W. v. Hoehn, 85 So. 696, 204 Ala. 248.

Unquestioned evidence
Admission of testimony which was cumulative of other unquestioned evi-which is immaterial[66] or irrelevant in that such evidence is not pertinent to any issue in the case or sequence as far as the result is concerned,[70.5] or where the effect of the error is inconsequential.[70.10] Similarly, the improper admission of evidence to contradict evidence previously erroneously admitted is no ground for reversal.[71]

On the other hand, error in the admission of evidence may be prejudicial and ground for reversal where such evidence is of great importance,[72] or goes to prove a material issue in the case,[72.5] or relates to matters vital to the issues and questions in disputes[72.10] or where such admission is inconsistent with substantial justice.[72.15] In particular circumstances, evidence admitted may be prejudicial when it is not relevant to the issues presented in the particular case,[73] or is too remote,[74] or is offered to establish a fact which such evidence has no tendency to prove,[75] or is of special value to the party offering it for a purpose other than that for which it was received.[76]

At all events, for the admission of evidence to be prejudicial it must not only be material to the issues, but must also be erroneous.[77]

(2) Operation and Effect of Admission

Where error in admitting evidence did not affect the result, or could not have done so, or did not prejudice the rights of the complaining party, such error is harmless.

A judgment will not be reversed because of the erroneous admission of evidence, where it did not, or probably did not, affect the result, conclusion, judgment, or verdict, or could not have done so,[78]

Effect of repetition

Where, when a question calling for evidence was first asked, defendant's counsel considered it of no importance, and did not interpose an objection, it cannot on appeal, because of unnecessary repetition, be magnified into reversible error.
Utah.—Shepard v. Payne, supra.

Issues unaffected

Any error in admitting evidence is not cause for reversal, where its receipt was not of sufficient importance to have affected the issues.

Mo.—Kunkel v. Griffith, 29 S.W.2d 64, 325 Mo. 392.

Collateral impeachment

Where defendant introduced certain written exhibits to attack the credibility of plaintiff's witnesses collaterally, the admission of irrelevant evidence as to dates and signatures on such exhibits was not prejudicial error.

Other statement of rule

Erroneous admission of evidence is not without prejudice unless it appears from examination of record and judgment that such evidence, alone or in conjunction with all evidence, probably did not influence result either favorably to party adducing it or adversely to opposing party.

No possible effect on result

To justify appellate court in disregarding erroneous admission of evidence, it is not enough that result might have been the same if improper evidence had been excluded, but it must appear that evidence could not by any possibility have affected the result.

Evidence introduced by one of codefendants

Introduction of incompetent evidence by one defendant is prejudicial to codefendant only when it affects the question of the latter's liability to plaintiff.

Mo.—McDonald v. Kansas City Gas Co., 59 S.W.2d 37, 332 Mo. 356.

Miscarriage of justice or violation of right

(1) Error in the admission of evidence may not constitute grounds for reversal unless such error results in a miscarriage of justice or a substantial violation of a constitutional or statutory right of the complaining party.

Okl.—Carver v. Knutson Elevators, Inc., 285 P.2d 391—McCarty v. Occidental Life Ins. Co. of Cal., 268 P.2d 221—Douvas v. Newcomb, 267 P.2d 600—Ridgeway v. Logan, 239 P.2d 778, 205 Okl. 603—Haggard v. Neely, 243 P. 758, 116 Okl. 155.

(2) Moreover, a judgment supported by competent evidence may not be reversed for admission of incompetent evidence unless from the whole record the appellate court is satisfied that there was a probable miscarriage of justice or a denial of a statutory or constitutional right of the complaining party.

Requirement that injury to complaining party appear

(1) The admission of incompetent evidence is not reversible error where no injury to appellant is shown.

Ga.—Manley v. Combs, 30 S.E.2d 485, 197 Ga. 768.

Tex.—Harris v. Shear, Civ.App., 177 S.W.2d 136.

(2) To preclude a reversal, notwithstanding the erroneous admission of evidence, it should clearly appear that no injury could have resulted.

Tex.—International Travelers' Ass'n v. Bettis, 35 S.W.2d 1040, 120 Tex. 67.

(3) Fact that defendant was allowed to have a question as to immaterial matter answered was harmless error, it not appearing how, under the answer, plaintiff could be injured.

Ala.—Southern States Co. v. Long, 73 So. 148, 15 Ala.App. 286.

(4) To justify reversal, in absence of a statement of facts, on ground that trial court erred in admitting certain evidence, reviewing court must ordinarily be able to see not only that trial court erred, but that such error must with reasonable certainty have produced a substantial injury to party complaining.

Tex.—Robinson v. Howard County, Civ.App., 287 S.W.2d 234, error refused no reversible error.

Evidence with respect to damages

Admission of erroneous evidence concerning the measure of damages did not require a reversal, where party who introduced the evidence.[81] Further, the erroneous admission of evidence is no ground for reversal where the effect of such admission was neither helpful to the party introducing the evidence nor harmful to the opposite party,[82] or where neither advantage nor prejudice has resulted to either party by reason of the admission of the evidence complained of.[83]

On the other hand, the admission of incompetent evidence which operates to the prejudice or injury of the rights of the complaining party is prejudicial or reversible error,[84] as is the admission of evidence which tends to becloud the issues[84.5] or to distract the attention of the jury from the real issues in the case,[85] or to give the jury an opportunity to substitute the finding of a criminal jury for its own independent judgment.[85.5] Likewise, the admission of evidence which, although immaterial or irrelevant, tends to mislead,[86] confuse,[86.5] or prejudice[86.10] the jury, or to provoke sympathy for the party offering the evidence,[87] is ground for reversal. Further, error in the admission of evidence may constitute ground for reversal where such admission tends to inflame the minds of the jury against one of the parties to the cause,[88] or impeaches the evidence of the party cast.[89]

(3) Circumstances of Particular Case

(a) In general

(b) Conduct of parties or counsel

(c) Evidence of party against whom judgment is not sought

(a) In General

Error in admitting evidence may be rendered harmless by the circumstances existing in the particular case, as where competent evidence established the case or the point sought to be established by the erroneously admitted evidence.

Error claimed to have been committed in admitting evidence may be regarded on appeal as harmless because of the existing circumstances in the particular case, as where it is apparent, or reasonably probable, that the verdict or finding would or must have been the same had the particular evidence not been admitted,[90] or where substantial justice has been rendered.[90.5] Moreover, error committed in the admission of evidence may, on appeal, be considered to be harmless where the legal or competent evidence abundantly established the case,[91] or was sufficient to take the issues to the

Mo.—Zeppenfeld v. Morgan, App., 185 S.W.2d 898.

As depending on whether case is tried by jury

(1) It has been held that the rule that the introduction of incompetent evidence is harmless where sufficient legal evidence is introduced to sustain the verdict does not apply where the trial is before a jury.
Tex.—Texarkana & Ft. S. Ry. Co. v. Wilson, Civ.App., 204 S.W. 491.

(2) There exists, however, authority to the effect that the rule that judgment will not be reversed for admission of incompetent evidence, if there was other competent evidence unless the incompetent evidence affected the result, applies where a jury acts in an advisory capacity, as well as in cases tried without a jury.
Kan.—Sipe v. Sipe, 173 P. 13, 102 Kan. 742, 103 Kan. 181.

Competent evidence supporting finding or finding and conclusion

(2) If there is sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict, the judgment will not be reversed because immaterial facts are admitted, unless such admission probably influenced the jury in their findings.

Tex.—Stein v. Roberts, Civ.App., 217 S.W. 166.

(3) There being evidence to support the verdict for plaintiff, admission of evidence, some of which is but slightly material, if at all, is not ground for reversal.

Colo.—Biggs v. Biggs, 241 P. 539, 78 Colo. 310.

(4) New trial should not be granted if relevant testimony sustains the verdict, although some irrelevant testimony was admitted.

Fla.—Davis v. Ivey, 112 So. 264, 93 Fla. 387, certiorari denied Mellon v. Ivey, 48 S.Ct. 19, 275 U.S. 526, 72 L.Ed. 407.

(5) The admission of incompetent evidence is not a ground of reversal if there was competent evidence to support the decision.

Kan.—Hicks v. Sage, 180 P. 780, 104 Kan. 723.

(6) Judgment entered on trial to court will not be disturbed because of errors in the admission of evidence, if other evidence sustains the judgment.

Mo.—Drake v. Kansas City Public Service Co., 63 S.W.2d 75, 333 Mo. 520.

(8) Errors in the admission of testimony were harmless, where other evidence warrants judgment against defendant and the appellate court can render proper judgment.

La.—Driefus v. Levy, App., 140 So. 259.

(9) Even though the court admits in evidence statements from medical books and reports which are not admissible, such admission is not ground for reversal where the judgment is supported by other evidence.

case or the contention of the party offering such evidence.[93]

Similarly, error in admitting evidence may not be ground for reversal where the issue or matter to which the incompetent evidence relates has been eliminated,[94] or where such evidence has not been considered[94.5] or used,[94.10] or where the effect of the incompetent evidence is nullified by a subsequent statement of the witness to the contrary.[95] Error in admitting evidence may likewise be considered to be harmless where the incompetent evidence is in no way inconsistent with the complaining party's contentions,[96] or where, even though the improper evidence is eliminated, a peremptory instruction should be given for the party in whose behalf it was admitted.[97]

On the other hand, error in admitting evidence may be deemed to be prejudicial where it is impossible to determine in the particular case whether or not the jury were, in the admission of the evidence complained of, unduly influenced in reaching the verdict actually returned in the lower court.[98] Moreover, error in the admission of evidence may require a reversal where there is no

Admission on one of several grounds any of which might have supported general verdict
Where there are several grounds or elements of the case, a verdict on any one of which would entitle plaintiff to the relief prayed for, an error in the admission of evidence on any one of the grounds is prejudicial error where a general verdict is rendered, since it is impossible to de-competent evidence to sustain the finding or judgment,[99] or where, but for the admission of such evidence, a verdict for the complaining party would have been demanded.[1] Similarly, error in admitting evidence may be regarded as prejudicial and to warrant a reversal where, in the absence of the evidence erroneously admitted, it is doubtful whether the verdict actually rendered in the particular case would be sustained,[2] or where such evidence must have influenced the jury in fixing the amount of the verdict,[2.5] or may have led to an increase in the amount thereof.[2.10]

At all events, error in admitting evidence in any particular case will more readily be deemed to be prejudicial, and to require a reversal, where the case is close on the facts or the point is not clearly established,[3] where the manner of admitting par-termine on which ground the verdict was rendered.

Idaho.—Jakeman v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 256 P. 88, 43 Idaho 505.

Where no special findings and verdict may have been predicated on any one of several issues

Where there were no special findings, and the verdict may have been predicated on any one of three issues of fact, and the court erred to appellants' prejudice in reception of evidence on any of the issues, they were entitled to reversal.

N.Y.—Wilsker v. Paul Gerli & Co., 170 N.Y.S. 288, 182 App.Div. 787.

Where finding for either party would have been supported by substantial testimony

Where it appears that a finding for either party would have been supported by substantial testimony, and it is a close question of fact concerning defendant's liability, if incompetent testimony was admitted, and the appellate court cannot say that it did not affect the result, the admission of such testimony will be held reversible error.

Mo.—Young v. Hoover, App., 233 S. W. 501.

Where impossible to determine on which of two defenses jury based verdict

Where it is impossible to determine on which of two defenses the jury based their verdict for defendant, the erroneous admission of evidence affecting one of the defenses was ground for new trial.

N.D.—First Nat. Bank v. Davidson, 188 N.W. 194, 48 N.D. 944.

Where jury might have found either way and evidence admitted adds to weight

Error cannot be held harmless where the jury might have found either way, and illegal testimony adds materially to the weight of the evidence.

Equity proceedings

Ala.—Baggett v. State, 34 So.2d 688, 250 Ala. 413.

Conflict in evidence

Where there is such a conflict in the evidence that the determination either way will not be disturbed on appeal, it cannot be said that losing party is not prejudiced by material evidence erroneously admitted.

Iowa.—Steensland v. Iowa-Illinois Gas & Elec. Co., 47 N.W.2d 162, 242 Iowa 534.

Purpose of improper testimony

In close cases of contested fact, where misleading testimony is improperly admitted, supreme court must accept it as having been tendered and admitted for purpose of establishing some fact vitally necessary to prove the case, or as having a tendency to influence jury in reaching a conclusion; and where a verdict is in favor of party insisting on introduction of such testimony, court cannot say testimony had no effect and was harmless.

Fla.—Perper v. Edell, 44 So.2d 78—Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Campbell, 139 So. 890, 104 Fla. 274.

Collateral facts; credibility of witnesses

Where testimony is in conflict, it is not reversible error for courts to admit evidence of collateral facts to determine credibility of witnesses.

Mont.—O'Sullivan v. Simpson, 212 P.2d 435, 123 Mont. 314.

Affidavit executed four months after conversation

Where there was a sharply drawn issue of fact on a point as to a certain conversation, the admission of an affidavit made four months after the conversation was prejudicial error, although several other witnessticular evidence or the nature thereof is peculiarly such as to create a situation prejudicial to the party against whom such evidence is introduced,[4] or where a verdict in favor of the party introducing the evidence is excessively large in view of the other evidence in the case.[5]

(b) Conduct of Parties or Counsel

The conduct of parties or counsel may be such as to render error in admitting evidence harmless, as where the party complaining introduces, or fails to object to the admission of, similar evidence.

Error in the admission of evidence is not ground for reversal where the party complaining introduces evidence of the same, or of a similar, kind,[6] or evidence establishing the same fact,[7] or where he has alleged that fact in his own pleadings.[7.5] Similarly, error in the admission of evidence may be harmless where the same or similar evidence has been admitted without objection,[8] or where other es on the trial which was eight years later gave the same testimony.

Admission of statements against interest
Va.—Carter v. Pickering, 62 S.E.2d 856, 191 Va. 801.

Curative admissibility
Where defendant offered evidence of same character as that offered subsequently by plaintiff, to which defendant objected as inadmissible, court of appeals invoked against defendant the doctrine of curative admissibility, that an opponent may reply with similar evidence whenever it is needed for removing an unfair prejudice which might otherwise have ensued.
Mo.—Biener v. St. Louis Public Service Co., App., 160 S.W.2d 780.

Same testimony or equivalent thereof
Error, if any, in admission of testimony is not prejudicial, where the complaining party thereafter introduced the same testimony or the equivalent thereof.
Iowa.—Morrow v. Downing, 232 N. W. 483, 210 Iowa 1195.

Where other evidence to same effect
Mo.—Whittington v. Westport Hotel Operating Co., 33 S.W.2d 963, 326 Mo. 1117.

(1) Erroneous admission of incompetent documents over objection and exception was held not to require a reversal where parol evidence as to incompetent contents of documents was received without objection or exception.

Ohio.—Sandusky Packing Co. v. Hoffman, 195 N.E. 483, 129 Ohio St. 300.

(2) Admission of certain exhibits was harmless where contents thereof had been fully testified about without objection and they were offered and received simply as originals of exhibits which were already in evidence.

Vt.—Springfield Co-op. Freeze Locker Plant v. Wiggins, 63 A.2d 182, 115 Vt. 445.

(3) Where plaintiff permitted reading of certain document to jury, without objection, before its introduction as an exhibit, he could not claim error in admission of such exhibit.

Ohio.—Pfister v. City of Cleveland, 113 N.E.2d 366, 96 Ohio App. 185, appeal dismissed 112 N.E.2d 657, 159 Ohio St. 580.

(4) Admission of exhibit was not error where a large part of items therein had been read into record evidence tending to establish the same facts is admitted without objection.[9] without objection prior to the offering and admission of the exhibit.

Neb.—State ex rel. Strange v. School Dist. of Nebraska City, 33 N.W.2d 358, 150 Neb. 109.

Reading instruments

(1) Reading of a letter to the jury was not reversible error, where the facts recited therein have been testified to by others.
U.S.—Clover Valley Lumber Co. v. Sierra Valley Creamery, C.C.A.Cal., 18 F.2d 858.

(2) Where the only objection to the reading of records in former actions was to the verdicts, and objection was sustained, but some verdicts were later read without objection, an objection on appeal to the reading of such records was held to be without merit.
Mo.—Kelly v. City of Cape Girardeau, 72 S.W.2d 880, 228 Mo.App. 865.

Where same witness covers matter without objection

(1) Error, if any, in admitting evidence is harmless where the same witness has already testified to the same effect.

Ky.—Smith v. Treacy, 172 S.W.2d 570, 294 Ky. 680—Bailey v. Shrader, 97 S.W.2d 575, 265 Ky. 663.
Vt.—E. L. Stoddard & Son v. Village of North Troy, 150 A. 148, 102 Vt. 462.

(4) Error in permitting witness to testify over objection was immaterial, where the same facts were otherwise testified to by the same witness without objection.
Ga.—Exchange Bank of Savannah v. Pate, 151 S.E. 823, 41 Ga.App. 1.

(5) Error in admitting evidence on direct examination is rendered harmless, where the witness testifies to the same facts without objection on cross-examination.
Ga.—Willis Lumber Co. v. Roddenbery, 77 S.E.2d 110, 88 Ga.App. 352.
Tex.—Roman v. Goldberg, Civ.App., 3 S.W.2d 482.

(6) Defendant, not objecting to testimony showing that certain restrictions were intended for the benefit of all purchasers, cannot complain of the admission of similar testimony on cross-examination of the same witness.
Tex.—Plaster v. Stutzman, Civ.App., 8 S.W.2d 750.

(7) Exceptions to admission of testimony of witness were not subject to review on appeal when he had given substantially same testimony without objection in other portions of his examination.

(8) Where evidence was admitted without objection and was re-elicited from same witness on redirect examination, admission of evidence was not ground for reversal.
Ga.—State Highway Bd. v. Coleman, 50 S.E.2d 262, 78 Ga.App. 54.

Where same or similar testimony is elicited from another witness

(1) Error in admitting evidence is harmless where the same evidence is elicited from another witness without objection.
N.J.—Burke v. Lincoln Transit Co., 117 A.2d 521, 37 N.J.Super. 433.
Tex.—Desdemona Gasoline Co. of Texas v. Garrett, Civ.App., 90 S.W. 2d 636, error dismissed—Export Ins. Co. v. Axe, Civ.App., 36 S.W. 2d 572, affirmed Export Ins. Co. of New York v. Axe, Com.App., 58 S. W.2d 39—Baker v. Farmers' Welfare Union, Civ.App., 8 S.W.2d 155.

(2) Accordingly, error, if any, in admitting defendant's testimony regarding certain representations by plaintiff's agent, was harmless, where identical testimony by another was admitted without objection.
Tex.—McCaskey Cash Register Co. v. Krause, Civ.App., 31 S.W.2d 858.

(3) Any error in admitting testimony did not require reversal, where the same fact was proved by another witness without objection.
Tex.—Watson Co. v. Bleeker, Civ. App., 10 S.W.2d 394.
Vt.—Burke v. Powers' Estate, 137 A. 202, 100 Vt. 342.

(4) Appellant cannot complain of testimony admitted over objection where another witness gave similar testimony without objection.

Moreover, error in the admission of evidence may be deemed to be harmless where the admission of evidence of which a party complains has otherwise been invited by him;[10] or where, if the incompetent evidence was false, the party complaining might have so shown;[11] or where the complaining party has departed from limitations placed on the introduction of evidence fully as much as the opposite party.[12] Further, error in the admission of evidence is not ground for reversal where evidence improperly admitted might well have been excluded in acting on a motion to direct a verdict.[13]

At all events, error in the admission of evidence is not a ground for reversal where the evidence admitted is not prejudicial in view of the testimony given by the parties,[14] or where the parties subsequently agreed as to the facts with respect to the matter to which the evidence related.[15]

Nevertheless, error in admitting evidence may be deemed to be prejudicial and to require a reversal where by reason of the conduct of the court or counsel the evidence in question is given particular emphasis,[16] as where counsel for the prevailing party refers to such evidence in his argument.[17] Moreover, error in admitting evidence may, under particular circumstances, constitute prejudicial error requiring reversal, notwithstanding the admission of other evidence of the same, or a similar, kind.[18]

(c) Evidence of Party against Whom Judgment Is Not Sought

Error in admitting evidence introduced by one coparty may be considered harmless where the complaining party is not seeking to bind such coparty.

Error in admitting certain evidence introduced by one of several coparties may, on appeal, be considered to be harmless where the complaining party is not seeking to bind the party who introduced the evidence complained of.[19]

d. In Particular Types of Action and with Respect to Particular Matters

The general rules for determining whether error in admitting evidence is harmless or prejudicial have been applied to a great variety of subject matters and types of action.

The general rules, already considered in this section, under which error in the admission of evidence is determined to be harmless or prejudicial have been applied in numerous types of action and with respect to numerous particular matters.[20]

In proceeding to revoke liquor tax certificate

The admission of certain evidence in a proceeding to revoke a liquor tax certificate was held to be prejudicial and reversible error where it was not apparent on appeal that there was other evidence sufficient to sustain the order of revocation which was entered in the lower court.

§ 1725. —— Evidence Admitted without Preliminary Proof

Error in admitting evidence without preliminary proof may or may not be ground for reversal, depending on whether the complaining party is prejudiced.

Error in admitting evidence without the necessary preliminary proof to render it competent, or the laying of a foundation, is not ground for reversal, where the complaining party was not prejudiced thereby,[82] or was not deprived of substantial justice.[82.5] On the other hand the admission of evidence incompetent for want of preliminary proof, which results in prejudice to the complaining party, is a ground for reversal.[83]

The rule that error in admitting evidence without preliminary proof may be harmless has been applied to cases wherein the error in question concerned admissions,[84] opinion evidence,[85] best or secondary evidence,[86] documentary evidence,[87] ex-

dence,[92.5] evidence of reputation,[92.10] or unsworn declarations.[93]

The rule that error committed by admitting evidence without first requiring preliminary proof, to make the admitted evidence competent, is not ground for reversal when such error is harmless has been applied to cases wherein the error in question consisted in admitting, without preliminary proof, evidence which is merely corroborative,[94] immaterial,[95] irrelevant,[96] of little probative force,[96.5] or impeaching.[97]

Error in admitting evidence without first requiring preliminary proof to make such evidence competent may be regarded as harmless error, depending on the circumstances of the particular case, as where the fact sought to be thus proved was conclusively established by other evidence which is competent,[98] or was admitted by the objecting party in his testimony[99] or pleadings,[1] where there is no dispute on the only point to which such evidence relates,[2] or where there was full opportunity to cross-examine.[2.5] Moreover, error, if any, in admitting evidence without preliminary proof may be deemed to be harmless where the verdict is clearly right on the whole evidence and is fully supported by competent evidence;[3] where parol evidence improperly admitted is in exact accord with written evidence subsequently introduced;[4] where the evidence alleged to be erroneously admitted was introduced to establish a point which the complaining party was required to prove;[5] where in view of other evidence in the case error in not requiring preliminary proof is harmless;[6] or where the evi-

Evidence of fraud without proof that indorsee of note was not holder in due course

Where a maker, sued on a note, alleged facts constituting fraud at common law which would be a defense against a payee but not against a holder in due course, permitting the maker to introduce evidence of fraud sufficient as a defense at common law without first producing affirmative proof that the indorsee was not the holder in due course was not prejudicial error.

dence is true and the production of the primary proof would necessarily lead to the same result.[7] Further, admitting evidence prematurely offered without preliminary proof may be harmless where the same evidence is subsequently admitted after proper preliminary proof.[8]

On the other hand, error in the admission of evidence without preliminary proof may be regarded as prejudicial where the actual influence of such error cannot be known,[9] or where the evidence is admitted subject to a promise that the party introducing the evidence would prove facts making the evidence competent, but he fails so to do.[10]

Error committed in admitting evidence without preliminary proof may be cured by subsequent matters.[11]

Discrimination

In an action on a hail insurance policy covering crops, the trial court's admitting opinions on certain matters when offered by insured and excluding them when offered by insurer was not reversible error, although there were no extraneous circumstances preventing the rules of evidence from working the same way when invoked by either party.

Iowa.—Slinger v. Farmers' Mut. Hail Ins. Ass'n of Iowa, 258 N.W. 101, 219 Iowa 329.

In hearings on interlocutory injunction, the admission of some opinion evidence will not necessarily require a reversal.

held harmless where such evidence is merely corroborative,[16] cumulative,[17] or impeaching,[18] although in particular circumstances cumulative evidence has been held prejudicial.[18.5] On the other hand, error in the admission of opinion evidence may be prejudicial, and ground for reversal, where the opinion relates to a material fact, or one which the jury are required to determine,[19] or which is not a subject for expert opinion,[19.5] or where the testimony went to the controlling issue in the case and probably, if not necessarily, induced the jury's finding thereon;[19.10] and the admission of opinion evidence which is based, or largely based, on hearsay is reversible error.[19.15]

The form in which opinion evidence is admitted may be such that error in such admission shall be regarded as harmless, as where the opinion is stated as a mere possibility[20] or where the answer of the witness, while purporting to state his opinion, does not in fact indicate what his opinion was.[21] Similarly, error in admitting a conclusion of a witness may be deemed to be harmless where the conclusion given is a mere matter of computation[22] or comparison,[23] or a mere estimate.[24]

Error committed in admitting opinion evidence is harmless where there was no room for difference of opinion,[25] where the jury must have reached the same conclusion as the witness,[26] where the opinion could not have affected prejudicially the knowledge or the views of the jury,[26.5] or where the testimony is merely the opinion of the witness on a matter which the physical facts rendered conclusive.[26.10] is one of common knowledge,[27] or is an obvious fact,[27.5] or where the facts on which the opinion is based are in evidence,[28] and particularly where it is apparent that the jury acted on the facts alone on which the opinion was given.[29]

On the other hand, admitting expert opinion evidence on a matter of common knowledge has been held reversible error on the ground that such evidence invades the province of the jury;[29.5] and error committed in the admission of opinion evidence may be considered to be prejudicial and ground for reversal where no facts on which the opinion was based were adduced in evidence,[30] or where the facts in evidence standing alone were insufficient to establish the ultimate fact which the witness testified in his opinion existed.[31]

Effect of other evidence. Error in admitting opinion evidence is harmless where, in view of other evidence in the case, the opinion of the witness was not material,[32] or not necessary,[32.5] where the effect of the evidence which has been admitted is nullified by other evidence,[33] or where the opinion evidence erroneously admitted did not conflict with other evidence in the case,[34] or was supported by such other evidence.[34.5] Moreover, the admission of opinion evidence may be harmless notwithstanding such evidence is adduced by a hypothetical question which omits certain evidence where such evi-

Opinion evidence as to facts established by other evidence see infra § 1731.

Conclusion after detailed testimony
Where an expert witness testifies in detail and at length prior to being asked objectionable questions, and in response to such questions states an opinion or conclusion on the ultimate fact in issue conclusion is harmless error since it adds nothing to weight of his testimony, and it is for jury to determine true probative value thereof.
Okl.—Maben v. Lee, 260 P.2d 1064.

dence and conclusions therefrom are conflicting.[35] Allowing a witness to state his conclusion is not necessarily reversible error where he has previously stated the facts on which his conclusion is based.[35.5]

On the other hand, error in admitting may be prejudicial and ground for reversal where the evidence on the question in regard to which the testimony was admitted was evenly balanced[36] or sharply conflicting,[37] or where other evidence in the case, on the point in question, was not coextensive with the evidence claimed to be erroneously admitted.[38] Similarly, the erroneous admission of opinion evidence may constitute reversible error where the basis for such opinion is not in conformity with other evidence in the case,[39] or where, on the question of the value of certain property in suit, there was no other evidence.[40]

Effect of conduct of parties. Error in admitting opinion evidence may be considered to be harmless by reason of the conduct of the parties in the particular case, as where there was no objection to the admission of the opinion evidence complained of,[41] where other evidence to the same effect, or of the same nature, has been admitted without objection,[42] where the fact in respect of which the opinion was given was admitted by the opposite party,[43] or where such party introduced similar testimony.[43.5]

Opportunity to cross-examine. Error in admitting opinion evidence may be regarded as harmless where the objecting party has an opportunity to cross-examine the witness and to show the real value of his testimony.[44]

Amount of verdict or judgment. Error in the admission of opinion evidence may be regarded as harmless where the opinion relates to the amount of damages recoverable, and the verdict is for a much less sum than the witness testified should be allowed,[45] where the verdict is not excessive,[46]

Facts inadequate to sustain conclusion

Error in permitting a witness to state his conclusion as to the very fact in issue is not rendered harmless by fact that elsewhere in his testimony he has detailed some facts which tend toward such conclusion, but which standing alone, are wholly inadequate to sustain the conclusion.

Error in admitting hearsay evidence may be considered to be harmless where such evidence is not material to the point in issue[50] or where the evidence admitted threw little, if any, light on the point in controversy,[51] or relates to a matter which would not have materially affected the result,[51.5] or does not bring in any fact on which the liability of defendant is dependent.[51.10] Error in the admission of hearsay evidence is likewise deemed to be harmless where such evidence is merely cumulative[52] or corroborative.[53] However, error in admitting hearsay evidence may be prejudicial and require reversal where the evidence is admitted on a material point in dispute,[54] or is material to vital issues,[54.5] or where the evidence admitted is the sole testimony on the issue to which it relates[55] or corroborates testimony on which alone the right of recovery depends.[56]

Error committed in the admission of hearsay evidence may be harmless by reason of particular circumstances, as where the other evidence in the case is such that the jury could not have been misled by the admission of the hearsay evidence of which complaint is made,[57] or where the same or similar evidence, or other evidence to the same effect, was admitted without objection or exception.[58] On the other hand, the circumstances existing in a particular case may be such that the admission of hearsay evidence must be deemed to be prejudicial, as where the evidence in question has been admitted on a point, or issue which is sharply contested,[59] or as to which the evidence is close,[59.5] or sharply conflicting,[59.10] or where the evidence was calculated to inflame the jury against the party against whom it was introduced.[59.15]

Subsequent testimony not connecting party

However, in action for alienation of affections and criminal conversa-

§ 1728. —— Admission of Evidence in Trial by Court

Ordinarily error in admitting evidence in a trial by a court without a jury is harmless, as where there is other sufficient legal evidence to support the findings, judgment, or decree; on the other hand, the admission of incompetent evidence may be prejudicial error where it influences the decision of the court.

Error in admitting evidence in a trial before a court is ordinarily regarded as harmless and not ground for reversal where the evidence is admitted in the trial of a suit in equity,[60] unless substantial justice requires a reversal,[60.5] as well as in an action tried by the court without a jury.[61]

tion, admission of husband's testimony as to statements of wife, not uttered in defendant's presence, that she was ill from an abortion operation, was prejudicial error as hearsay, notwithstanding subsequent testimony relating to same conversation was admitted without objection, where subsequent testimony did not connect defendant with wife's illness.

ing party was prejudicially affected by the admission of the evidence in question.[73]

On the other hand, the admission of incompetent evidence which influences the court in arriving at its decision may be regarded as prejudicial error requiring reversal.[74] Similarly, prejudicial error results from the admission of incompetent evidence where the reviewing court cannot determine what weight and influence such evidence had on the trial court.[74.5] Moreover, where the view is taken that error in admitting evidence in a trial by a court will not be considered unless it affirmatively appears that the evidence admitted was disregarded by the court in reaching its decision, the improper admission of evidence in a trial by a court may be deemed to be prejudicial error and ground for reversal in the absence of a showing that such evidence was disregarded.[75] Similarly, it has been held that in the absence of a showing that no prejudice resulted from the admission of incompetent evidence, such admission is reversible error.[76]

At all events, the judgment of a trial court hearing a case without a jury will ordinarily be reversed for the admission of improper evidence only where it appears that the court was influenced by the improper evidence, or that the evidence admitted was essential to the findings,[77] that the evidence affected the decision,[77.5] that the decision was based in whole or in part on such evidence,[77.10] or that appellant was harmed by the error,[78] or where the appellate court cannot determine whether or not the trial court was influenced by the evidence erroneously admitted.[79] It is immaterial that evidence improperly admitted under conditions making such admission prejudicial error would, under other conditions, have been admissible.[80]

Error, if any, in admitting evidence in the trial of a suit by a court may be harmless by reason of the conduct of the parties, as where the complaining party introduces similar evidence,[81] withdraws an objection previously entered to evidence on the same subject,[82] or proves substantially the same facts by his own witnesses.[83] Moreover, error, if any, in admitting evidence in a trial by court may be deemed to be harmless where the complaining party neither objected to such evidence nor made a motion to strike it.[84]

In trials without a jury, the admission of evidence as to an issue found in appellant's favor,[85] or where there is no finding on the issue covered by such evidence,[86] is not ground for reversal.

The admission of evidence in the trial of an action had before a court is not ordinarily ground for reversal notwithstanding special issues in the case are submitted to a jury.[87]

Effect of other evidence. Whether or not error in the admission of evidence in a case tried by a court without a jury is harmless may depend on the presence of other evidence in the case; for example, the improper admission of evidence in a case tried by a court may be considered harmless where evidence properly admitted is sufficient,[88] where there is sufficient legal evidence to support the judgment or finding,[89] or where the court could not

Case in equity or admission of evidence on equitable issue

(1) In an equity case it cannot be held that prejudice resulted to plaintiff, appellant, because jury, on a directed issue of fact, heard evidence upon issues reserved for court's determination.

Minn.—Johnson v. Holmes, supra.

(2) Where the verdict in an equity case is clearly proper and has been affirmed by the trial court, an appellate court will not grant a new trial merely because improper evidence has been admitted.

N.D.—Merritt v. Adams County Land & Investment Co., 151 N.W. 11, 29 N.D. 496.

(3) The admission of incompetent evidence on an equitable issue being considered by jury was not prejudicial, since the verdict of the jury on such an issue was merely advisory.

Ky.—Early v. Early, 207 S.W. 466, 182 Ky. 757.

(4) In a suit to set aside an executed contract of sale by an alleged incompetent, which suit was exclusively of equitable jurisdiction, any error in allowing the vendor to testify after the committee and the wife of the alleged incompetent had testified was not prejudicial, where the vendor's testimony was cumulative.

Ky.—Acree's Committee v. Bialock, 277 S.W. 464, 211 Ky. 450.

Where different verdict would not have resulted

Question on review

Reviewing court will not reverse because of error in admission of evidence, but will determine whether there is enough competent evidence to sustain judgment.

Ill.—Perry v. Waddelow, 115 N.E.2d 348, 351 Ill.App. 356—Agnell v. Illinois Bell Tel. Co., 109 N.E.2d 398, 348 Ill.App. 503.

Requirement that incompetent evidence support essential feature of judgment

In cases tried by the court, the reception of incompetent evidence will not be held prejudicial, unless it is the only evidence supporting some essential feature of the judgment.

Wis.—Bell v. Milwaukee Electric Ry.

& Light Co., 172 N.W. 791, 169 Wis. 408—Hannah v. Knuth, 154 N.W. 985, 161 Wis. 467, Ann.Cas. 1917C 681.

View that absence of competent evidence to support judgment must appear

A judgment rendered in a case heard without the intervention of a jury may not be reversed on account of the admission of incompetent evidence, unless the record discloses that there was no competent evidence to support it, or in some other way shows affirmatively that the improper evidence affected the result.

Okl.—Stone v. Spencer, 191 P. 197, 79 Okl. 85.

Where conclusions supported by sufficient evidence

(1) The admission of testimony over objection is not reversible error in a trial before a court without a jury, if there is competent testimony to justify the conclusions made.

Tex.—Willis v. First Nat. Bank, Civ. App., 22 S.W.2d 475.

(3) Reception in the evidence of letters between parties to a divorce action, which were inadmissible as confidential communications, was not prejudicial, where the court disregarded the letters in making a decision, and other competent evidence sustained its conclusions.

N.Y.—Hall v. Hall, 208 N.Y.S. 814, 211 App.Div. 832.

Where findings based on uncontroverted evidence

Error in admitting testimony in a nonjury case did not require reversal by the court of civil appeals, where the findings were based on uncontroverted testimony.

Tex.—Ferguson v. Ferguson, Com. App., 23 S.W.2d 673.

Where both findings and judgment or findings and decree supported by competent evidence

(1) The admission of incompetent evidence is not reversible error in a case tried without a jury, where there is sufficient competent evidence to sustain the court's finding and judgment.

have done otherwise than find for plaintiff on the other evidence in the case.[90] Also, the admission of incompetent evidence is harmless unless the remaining evidence on a material issue is conflicting.[90.5]

On the other hand, while it is only where the competent evidence fails to support the findings of fact[91] or judgment[91.5] that the improper admission of evidence will constitute prejudicial error, in the absence of competent evidence to support the finding of the trial court, error in admitting evidence will constitute reversible error.[92] It has also been held that the admission of illegal evidence over objection requires a reversal, unless the remaining evidence is without conflict and is sufficient to support the decree or judgment;[92.5] a fortiori, the judgment will be reversed where the evidence as a whole is conflicting and the incompetent evidence was received over objections.[92.10] The admission of incompetent evidence is reversible error even though there is sufficient evidence to support a judgment, if the competent evidence in the case does not demand such a judgment.[92.15]

Error committed in admitting evidence in a trial without a jury is not rendered harmless by the court's finding that other evidence alone would have convinced it,[93] or by a certificate of the court that its decision was based on other and competent evidence.[94]

Other circumstances. In addition to the factors heretofore considered in this section, other particular circumstances which may be considered in determining that the admission of evidence in a trial by court is harmless are that the result of the case would have been the same if the evidence in question had not been admitted,[95] or that such evidence

Admission of incompetent evidence is ground for reversal where it appeared that the court's findings were based thereon and there was not sufficient competent evidence to support the necessary findings.

was stricken.[96] Moreover, the admission of particular evidence may be deemed to be harmless where consideration of the evidence was made to depend on its being proved to be competent,[97] or where the trial judge states that he admitted the evidence in question merely for what it was worth.[98]

However, the admission of incompetent evidence of a prejudicial nature is reversible error where the state of the record is such that the court could well have found for either party.[98.5]

§ 1729. Facts Otherwise Established

The admission of improper or objectionable evidence, as will be noted in the following sections, is not prejudicial error where the same or substantially the same evidence has already been admitted without objection or over objection as discussed infra § 1730; or where the fact sought to be proved by the incompetent evidence is fully established by other and competent evidence, infra § 1731, or has already been established by such evidence before the incompetent evidence is admitted, infra § 1731 b.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 1730. —— By Prior Admission of Same Evidence

Error in admitting incompetent evidence is generally harmless where the same, or substantially the same, evidence has been previously received without, or over, objection.

The admission of objectionable evidence is generally not prejudicial error where the same, or substantially the same, evidence has been previously received without, or over, objection,[99] as by ad-

Error held not to be cured by decision on motion for new trial

Prejudicial error in the reception and consideration of incompetent evidence was not cured by a decision on a motion for a new trial that the same facts would have been found without consideration of the incompetent evidence.

N.D.—Board of Education of City of Edmore v. Anderson, 243 N.W. 817, 62 N.D. 364.

Where result would be the same

In equity, the erroneous admission of evidence does not necessarily require a reversal of a decree where, on consideration of the whole record, the result must have been the same, even if the rulings admitting the evidence had been without error.

U.S.—Hays v. Harris, C.C.A.Ark., 78 F.2d 66, certiorari denied 56 S.Ct. 134, 296 U.S. 613, 80 L.Ed. 435.

Where competent evidence sufficient

On a trial to the court, the admission of hearsay testimony does not require a reversal, if there be legitimate evidence sufficient to support the judgment and the result would have been the same had the hearsay testimony been excluded.

Tex.—Wells Fargo & Co. v. Long, Civ.App., 190 S.W. 530.

Incompetent evidence not shown to affect result

Error could not be predicated on the admission of allegedly incompetent testimony in a trial by a court, in the absence of a showing that such testimony affected the result.

U.S.—U. S. v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., C.C.A.Mont., 77 F.2d 587.

Where conclusion of court correct

Even though the admission of evidence on behalf of a carrier as to the technical distinction between the words "delivering railroad" and "carrier," as used in the company's tariff, was technical error because it was immaterial and irrelevant, it was not prejudicial error where the trial court reached the conclusion as to the construction of the tariff which would be right if such testimony were disregarded.

A judgment in an action to quiet title will not be reversed for the admission of evidence relating to the possession of another tract of land not in controversy, but used in connection with the tract in controversy, where the trial court stated it had admitted such evidence merely for what it might be worth in considering the ultimate conclusions of the case.

missions and stipulations[1] or witnesses[1.5] of the opposite party. The admission of objectionable evidence is not a cause for reversal where it does not appear that the evidence, when admitted the second time, exerts more influence than when admitted the first time,[2] or that other prejudice has resulted.[3]

The drawing out of improper testimony from a witness on cross-examination is harmless where the witness has testified to the same effect on direct examination,[4] and it is also harmless for a witness to reassert, when called in rebuttal, a statement which he had made on his examination in chief,[5] or to restate, on redirect examination, substantially what he testified to on cross-examination.[6]

a. In General

The admission of incompetent evidence is harmless where the fact thereby sought to be proved is fully established by other and competent evidence, especially where the competent evidence is received without objection.

The admission of improper and objectionable evidence is harmless error where the fact thereby sought to be shown is fully and clearly established by other evidence which is competent.[7] This rule

Tex.—Archibald v. Perry, Civ.App., 258 S.W.2d 173.

(2) Error in permitting plaintiff's witnesses to testify as to the rate of speed of an automobile, when they were not qualified to judge the speed of a car, is not reversible or material, where the physical facts conclusively show that the car was moving at a dangerous speed at the time of the accident.

Mo.—Irwin v. McDougal, 274 S.W. 923, 217 Mo.App. 645.

(3) Introduction of the words "fast" and "terrific" in describing a streetcar's speed is harmless, where a moderate speed of the car is established.

(4) Where it is plain from the evidence that defendant's chauffeur was exceeding the speed limit, permitting a witness to testify that the chauffeur had stated shortly after accident that he was driving a little fast, and that the passenger had stated that she had requested the chauffeur not to drive so fast, is without prejudice to defendant.

Tex.—Burnett v. Anderson, Civ.App., 207 S.W. 540.

(5) Error in admitting testimony that automobile was traveling at "pretty good speed" when about one mile from scene of accident was not prejudicial, in view of other evidence tending to establish that automobile was traveling at high rate of speed both near to and at point of accident.

Ky.—Roy v. Lyons, 272 S.W.2d 50.

also where it consists of hearsay[8] or opinion[9] evi- | dence.

(6) Admitting testimony with respect to speed of automobile over objection that it was a conclusion was harmless where other testimony and physical facts established that automobile was being operated in violation of city speed ordinance.

Ga.—Hill v. Kirk, 50 S.E.2d 785, 78 Ga.App. 310.

Void ordinance

In an action for injury sustained when struck by defendant's automobile, admission in evidence of a void ordinance prescribing the rate of speed is not prejudicial to defendant, where the evidence proved that the automobile driver at the time of the accident was violating the Motor Vehicle Act.

Limitations of rule. It must be borne in mind, however, that error in admitting improper evidence is harmless only where the other evidence is sufficient to establish the fact involved,[18] or the jury are not influenced by the illegal evidence;[19] or, as otherwise stated, only where the incompetent evidence has no tendency to establish any fact not admitted or fully established by competent evidence.[20] There is prejudice where the improperly admitted evidence is the strongest evidence introduced in the case,[21] or where it is likely that it impressed the jury equally as much as, if not more than, the competent evidence,[22] or that the jury gave some weight to the erroneously admitted evidence because of the remaining evidence being in sharp conflict[23] or the other witnesses being discredited or impeached.[24]

b. Evidence Already Admitted

The admission of incompetent evidence which is merely cumulative or corroborative of competent evidence already received on the same matter is not prejudicial error.

No prejudice attaches to the erroneous admission of evidence, where the fact involved has already been established by competent evidence and the evidence erroneously received is merely cumulative,[25] or the evidence erroneously received is mere-

Counsel's statement to the court of the fact that opposing counsel was seeking to elicit, in order to urge his objection to its competency, is not such establishment of the fact as to render harmless a subsequent proving of the fact.[29]

§ 1732. Admitted or Undisputed Facts

a. In general

b. Admissions in pleadings

a. In General

Admission of improper evidence relating to a fact which is admitted, conceded, or uncontroverted, or has been placed beyond dispute by uncontradicted evidence or agreement of the parties is harmless error.

It is harmless error for a court to permit the introduction of irrelevant, incompetent, or other improper evidence relating to a fact which is admitted, conceded, uncontroverted, or which has been placed beyond the realm of dispute by uncontradicted evidence which has been adduced,[30] or where were the best evidence, is not prejudicial, where, without considering the amount so proved, the bankrupt under the evidence was still insolvent.

Similar statement of rule

The admission of incompetent evidence is not available as error on appeal when appellant on his own behalf introduces evidence which admits, confesses, or otherwise sufficiently establishes the facts sought to be shown by the said incompetent evidence.

the facts are admitted by an agreement or stipulation entered into by the parties;[31] since, under the circumstances, the evidence could not mislead the jury.[32]

Various applications of this general rule have been made, among them cases in which the evidence improperly received consisted of hearsay,[33] secondary,[34] expert,[35] or opinion[36] evidence, evidence

§ 1733. Matters Requiring No Proof

a. Matters of common and judicial knowledge
b. Construction of writing in evidence

a. Matters of Common and Judicial Knowledge

The erroneous admission of evidence as to a matter of law, or a matter which is of common knowledge and of which the court may take judicial notice, or which follows as a legal conclusion or presumption from other facts, is harmless error.

As matters of law, such as the contents of a statute, and rights and liabilities fixed by law, require no proof, the admission of evidence tending to prove them is harmless error.[62] So, also, it is not prejudicial error to admit evidence to establish matters which in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, the court or jury would be presumed to know,[63] or which necessarily follow as legal conclusions or presumptions from the facts already established.[64]

It is not prejudicial error to receive evidence relating to a matter which is common knowledge and of which the court may take judicial notice,[65] or for a witness to express an opinion on a matter of common knowledge, experience, or observation.[66] Presumption of ownership, however, does not render harmless the erroneous admission of evidence of a gift.[67]

Admission of evidence for the purpose of showing knowledge or lack of knowledge is not reversible error, where, as a matter of law, a person is bound to know a certain thing;[68] and admission of evidence to show lack of knowledge is not reversible error where by reason of other holdings in the case knowledge is unnecessary.[69]

b. Construction of Writing in Evidence

The erroneous admission of evidence involving the construction of an unambiguous written instrument which is before the court is harmless where it is in consonance with the plain meaning of the instrument and the interpretation thereof by the court.

The admission of testimony tending to show the intent of the parties to a clear and unambiguous instrument, their understanding of its terms, or the

Accounts

Where defendant does not question the correctness of sworn itemized accounts filed with complaints, he is not prejudiced by the testimony respecting such accounts.

construction put on it by them, is harmless error when in consonance with the plain meaning of the instrument, which is before the court, and the interpretation given it by the court.[70] So, also, where one instrument is before the court for construction, the introduction in evidence of other written instruments to show the same construction as the court derives from the instrument itself is error without prejudice.[71]

§ 1734. Cure of Errors

Error in admitting evidence may be cured by subsequent acts or proceedings in the case.

Error in the admission of evidence as to improper matters is not ground for reversal where such matters were explained to the jury and no relief was sought as to them.[71.50] Error in admitting letters in evidence is harmless where the views expressed therein are orally argued before the jury by counsel for each party;[72] and error in the admission of evidence as to a particular fact is harmless where the assignment of error involving such fact is waived.[73] So, also, error in the admission of preliminary proof is harmless where the final evidence is not introduced;[74] error in the admission of photographs is cured by the jurors' inspection of the objects and localities photographed;[75] and an erroneous admission in ejectment on disclaimer of evidence, admissible only to show adverse possession, is cured by the subsequent injection of the general issue.[76]

Error, however, in the admission of incompetent evidence, aggravated by the statement of the court emphasizing its importance, is not cured by the subsequent proposal of the court to set aside the swearing of the jury.[77]

Agreed state of case. Where the parties agree as to the state of the case on which the improper evidence was admitted, any error in the admission of evidence as to such matters is cured.[77.5]

§ 1735. —— By Evidence Subsequently Admitted

a. In general
b. Evidence admitted in favor of adverse party
c. Evidence rendering incompetent evidence admissible

a. In General

(1) Same or similar evidence

(2) Evidence curing defects or supplying omissions

(1) Same or Similar Evidence

Error in admitting improper evidence may be cured by the subsequent establishment of the same facts by proper evidence of the same or similar effect.

If the same facts are afterward substantially established by proper evidence of the same or similar effect, the admission of improper evidence is harmless;[78] and this is especially so where the later evidence is admissed without contradiction[78.5] or objection.[79]

This rule has been applied to error in the admis-

As to payment

In an action on a note, the erroneous admission of hearsay declarations of plaintiff's officer as to part payment, tolling statute of limitations, is not cured by defendant's testimony that he paid such amount, where he stated that it was payment in settlement of the whole debt.
Colo.—Manby v. Sweet Inv. Co., 242 P. 51, 78 Colo. 371.

Insurance

Where an injured servant sued a third party for injuries, it was prejudicial to admit evidence that his employer had workmen's compensation insurance, creating an inference that he had been, or could be, compensated for the injuries, where no evidence that he had been compensated was subsequently produced.

of the improperly admitted evidence.[87.5] Also, such error is not cured by evidence which is not sufficient to overcome the prejudicial effect of the improper evidence;[88] and error in the admission of evidence which is not admissible under the pleadings is not cured by the admission of evidence of the same kind, even without objection.[89]

Opinion or conclusion. Error, if any, in permitting a witness to testify as to his opinion or conclusion is cured by the subsequent admission of proper evidence showing the facts with respect to which the opinion or conclusion is given,[90] or by the witness' testimony as to the same fact being admitted at another point without objection.[91]

Secondary evidence. The admission of secondary evidence as to a fact is harmless where the same fact is subsequently proved by primary competent evidence;[92] and, accordingly, secondary evidence as to the contents of a writing is not prejudicial where the writing is thereafter admitted in evidence,[93] or

As to negligence of surgeon

In a malpractice action against a physician who inserted, in a patient's chest, a drainage tube fastened only by adhesive tape, which tube slipped into the body and was lost therein, admission of testimony of a medical witness that witness usually put a safety pin at the end of the tube and had seen such method used at certain famous clinics is error as not testing defendant's care by an applicable standard, and the error is not cured by witness' general statement that his methods had been used by physicians in same and similar communities, where he did not say other methods were not recognized as proper; nor is it cured by testimony of plaintiff's other witnesses that the customary practice was to use a safety pin, where no witness testifies that defendant's method was not recognized as proper.

As to automobile tracks

Error, if any, in admitting opinion evidence, based on wheel tracks, that the car which struck plaintiff was a Ford, she having been struck by a Ford, is not prejudicial, where the witness proceeded to testify to certain facts, which if believed would show conclusively that defendant's car made such tracks.

However, an error in admitting evidence is not cured by the offering of evidence in rebuttal thereof by the objecting party,[6] or by his failure to object to evidence properly introduced for the purpose of impeaching the improper testimony.[7]

c. Evidence Rendering Incompetent Evidence Admissible

(1) In general

(2) Supplying necessary preliminary proof

(1) In General

Error in admitting incompetent evidence is cured by the subsequent admission of evidence rendering it competent.

Error in admitting incompetent evidence is cured by the subsequent introduction of evidence which renders it admissible,[8] as by the subsequent introduction of evidence by the adverse party which removes the objection to the admissibility of the evidence.[9] Error in admitting evidence as part of the cause of action which can be relevant only in rebuttal is harmless where it afterward becomes rele-

Portions of testimony at former trial

In a personal injury action, wherein a former trial had been had, it is not error to permit defendant to read portions of plaintiff's testimony, taken at the former trial and transcribed by the reporter, when plaintiff's counsel is permitted to read the balance of plaintiff's testimony relating to the same subject given at such former trial.

vant in rebuttal.[10] Similarly cross-examination on a fact not brought out on direct examination is harmless where the fact is subsequently shown.[11]

The fact, however, that evidence, incompetent for the purpose for which it was offered and admitted, subsequently becomes admissible for another purpose, as the case is developed, does not render the ruling harmless;[12] and it has been held that the erroneous admission of incompetent evidence over objection is not cured by cross-examination on the same subject, as for the purpose of testing the credibility of the witness or revealing the objectionable nature of the testimony.[13]

(2) Supplying Necessary Preliminary Proof

Error in admitting evidence without the necessary preliminary or connecting proof is cured by the subsequent introduction of such proof.

Since the order of proof is largely within the discretion of the trial court, the admission of evidence without the requisite preliminary or connecting proof is not prejudicial error where such proof is subsequently introduced,[14] or where it is offered and is withdrawn only on the opposite party's objection that it is immaterial.[15]

This rule has been applied to error in the admission in evidence of the acts[16] or declarations[17] of an agent without proof of agency; of a written instrument,[18] or of the contents of a lost instrument, without proof of execution;[19] of the contents of an instrument, without proof of its loss or destruction;[20] of opinion or expert evidence, without proof of competency,[21] or of the facts on which the opinion is based,[22] or, in case of a hypothetical question, without evidence to support facts stated therein;[23] of evidence dependent on a conspiracy, without proof of a conspiracy;[24] of a note of a corporation, without proof of authority to issue it;[25] of court records, without proper authentication;[26] of a plat, without proof of its correctness;[27] of handwriting, without proof of its genuineness;[28] of newspaper market quotations, without proof of the authenticity thereof and the reliability of the newspaper's source of information;[28.5] or of fires other than the one involved in the action, without evidence tending to connect them with defendant.[28.10]

Harmless error in admitting evidence without preliminary proof generally see supra § 1725.

General objection to the admission of evidence becomes merely an objection to the order of proof, where it appears later in the trial that the evidence is relevant, and hence admitting the evidence, when offered over such general objection, if error, is harmless.

§ 1736. —— By Verdict, Judgment, or Findings

a. In general
b. Direction of verdict
c. Special findings
d. Appellant not entitled to favorable decision in any event
e. As to damages

a. In General

Error in admitting evidence is harmless where the determination of the action shows that the evidence had no prejudicial effect on the verdict or judgment.

Errors in admitting evidence may be regarded as immaterial where the verdict is undoubtedly right, and the result would clearly be the same with or without the correction of such errors.[28.50] Error in the admission of evidence which is shown by the determination of the action, as apparent from the record, to have had no prejudicial effect on the verdict or judgment is harmless.[29] Such error is harmless where other and competent evidence in the case is sufficient to sustain the verdict and judgment,[30] →

As to ownership of automobile

In an action for negligently causing the death of plaintiff's intestate against a father as owner and a son as driver of an automobile which ran into him while the son was on the father's business, where the jury found the son not negligent, error in the admission of evidence as to the ownership of the automobile in the son was harmless.

N.J.—Gromer v. George, 101 A. 263, 90 N.J.Law 644.

General verdict for plaintiff imports a finding in his favor on all averments of complaint material to his recovery; and where evidence supporting one cause of action is untainted, error in the admission of evidence as to another cause of action is immaterial.

Cal.—Price v. Bekins Van & Storage Co., 176 P. 452, 179 C. 326.

In an action of trover and assumpsit, where the court finds for plaintiff on the trover count only, any error in admitting a verified account against defendant, if erroneous, is harmless to him.

Ala.—Bronaugh v. Evans, 85 So. 556, 204 Ala. 153.

"Two-issue" rule

(1) Where evidence was erroneously admitted on issue of contributory negligence but a general verdict was returned for defendant without interrogatories, the "two-issue" rule was applicable.

Ohio.—Bachman v. Ambos, 79 N.E. 2d 177, 83 Ohio App. 141.

(2) Within purview of "two-issue" rule, erroneous admission of evidence reflecting on any of elements of actionable negligence constitutes an erroneous admission of evidence reflecting on issue of negligence.

Ohio.—Holt v. Hartschuk, 122 N.E.2d 653, 96 Ohio App. 491.

(3) Contributory negligence as a defense to a cause of action for negligence exists only where there is actionable negligence.

Ohio.—Holt v. Hartschuk, supra.

not challenged by the complaining party,[36.5] or where the finding is contrary to the issue or theory on which the evidence was improperly admitted,[37] or where a finding based on evidence of the intention of the parties to the instrument in suit is in harmony with the legal construction thereof.[38] So, also, such an error is harmless even though the illegal evidence may have influenced the verdict, if the appellate court does not rely on the verdict, but on the record as brought up, and is not influenced by such evidence.[39]

Where the finding of the jury is not determinative of the controversy between the parties, the admission of incompetent evidence is not rendered harmless.[39.5] Error in admitting evidence is not harmless where an appellate court cannot say that the jury did not, in part, base their verdict on that evidence.[39.10]

b. Direction of Verdict

The direction of a verdict for one of the parties, under competent evidence in the case, renders harmless any error in the admission of evidence.

Where it appears that the trial court which directed a verdict against the complaining party did not give any binding effect to certain evidence, that party cannot complain of the admission of such evidence.[39.50] Error in the admission of evidence during the trial is harmless where the court, in accordance with competent evidence in the case, instructs the jury to return a verdict in favor of one party to an action, without submitting to their determination any issue in the case,[40] or directs a verdict on the count or issue on which the improper evidence is admitted,[41] the same rule governing in such

(3) Judgment in negligence action is not subject to affirmation under "two-issue" rule where issue of contributory negligence was submitted without error intervening but issue of actionable negligence was erroneously submitted.
Ohio.—Holt v. Hartschuk, supra.

(4) Even though issue of contributory negligence had been submitted without error, in automobile accident case, erroneous admission of evidence as to plaintiff's injuries constituted erroneous admission of evidence on issue of defendant's negligence and general verdict for defendant was not subject to affirmation under "two-issue" rule.
Ohio.—Holt v. Hartschuk, supra.

Where recovery is sought on two grounds and the jury find for defendant on the second ground, errors in rulings on questions of evidence offered in support of the second cause, are harmless, since they could not have prejudiced defendant during the trial under the first cause.

case as if the trial had been to the court without a jury.[42]

The admission of evidence of the oral negotiations preceding a written contract is harmless, where both parties move for a directed verdict.[43]

c. Special Findings

Error in the admission of evidence is rendered harmless by a special finding, as where that finding shows that such evidence had no effect on the verdict.

Objections, otherwise tenable, to the admission of evidence may be rendered unavailable by a special finding by the court or jury,[44] as where the finding renders immaterial the issue on which the improper evidence was admitted,[45] or shows that the verdict was not affected by such evidence,[46] or that it was based on other evidence.[47]

If, however, there is but a single issue in a case and a general verdict, and there are no findings on subordinate questions, error in admitting evidence as tending to prove the main issue is not cured by a statement of the jury that they have not considered it;[48] and where the finding indicates that the inadmissible evidence had some influence on the jury, the error is prejudicial.[49]

d. Appellant Not Entitled to Favorable Decision in Any Event

Where an appellant is not entitled to a favorable decision in any event, error in the admission of evidence is harmless.

The erroneous admission of evidence is harmless, and not ground for reversal, where the competent evidence in the case is such that the complaining party could not recover in any event, or the prevailing party was entitled to the verdict, finding, or judgment rendered in his favor in any event,[50]

Improper admission of opinion evidence is not cured by a finding of the court to the effect that such evidence is disregarded "except where the opinion is a matter of personal experience and knowledge to the expert, as shown by prior and later testimony," the appellate court having no means of determining how much of such testimony the trial court considered to be so fortified.

Va.—Jones v. Galleher & Co., 47 S. E.2d 333, 187 Va. 602.

(2) Error in admitting for defendant, in action for personal injuries, a hearsay statement concerning stopping distance, applicable only to defendant's automobile, was not prejudicial to plaintiff where jury found both parties were negligent and where evidence on question of humanitarian negligence was not sufficient for jury.

Mo.—Breshears v. Myers, 266 S.W. 2d 638.

(3) Admission of hearsay evidence is harmless where it was not contended that the evidence did not make a prima facie case and order overruling demurrer was not assigned as error.

Kan.—State v. Steele, 187 P.2d 382, 164 Kan. 123.

(4) Harmless error in admission of hearsay evidence generally see supra § 1727.

On different theory

The admission of evidence in support of a theory other than that on which the jury bases their verdict is not prejudicial.

Okl.—Kimmell v. Goehler, 226 P. 576, 99 Okl. 273.

One of several defenses

Where there is evidence sufficient to sustain one of several distinct defenses, alleged error as to matters of evidence relating wholly to other defenses is irrelevant, and becomes immaterial, and the wrongful exclusion or admission of such evidence would be nonprejudicial error.

S.D.—Mundon v. Greenameyer, 184 N. W. 257, 44 S.D. 440.

Opinion evidence

Error in the admission of opinion evidence is not reversible error where other and competent evidence is sufficient to support the verdict or finding.

Admission of accident report held harmless

Okl.—Astle v. Olmstead, 187 P.2d 997, 199 Okl. 498.

Admission in pleadings

The reviewing court need not consider exceptions to an admission of cause of action,[52] or make a case for the jury[52.5] or for the trier of the facts.[52.10]

Error in the admission of evidence is harmless where, notwithstanding the illegal evidence, the competent evidence is such that the prevailing party is entitled to the verdict or judgment as a matter of law, as being the only proper verdict or judgment that could be rendered,[53] or where the prevailing party is entitled to a directed verdict,[54] or where he evidence where the judgment was supported by admissions in the pleadings.

(1) In General

Error in admitting evidence as to the measure of damages is harmless where the amount awarded shows that the improper evidence had no appreciable effect on the verdict or judgment, or the amount awarded, as justified by the evidence, is not excessive.

Where the amount of the verdict is not questioned,[56.50] or where the verdict indicates that the correct measure of damages was applied,[56.55] error in admitting improper evidence as to damages is harmless. Error in the admission of evidence on the measure of damages is harmless where the amount awarded shows that such evidence did not have any effect, or at least no appreciable effect, on the verdict or judgment,[57] as where the record shows that the verdict was based on the competent, and not the incompetent, evidence as to damages.[58]

However, the admission of incompetent evidence as to damages may be prejudicial error,[58.5] as where such evidence must have been taken into consideration in order to make the damages equal the verdict;[59] and, accordingly, the admission of opinion evidence as to the amount of damage is reversible error, unless the verdict is so small that it is apparent that the error is harmless.[60] Error in admitting evidence as to damages is not cured by the introduction of other evidence where it cannot be determined to what extent the trier of facts relied on the erroneous testimony.[60.5] On a general verdict, the admission of improper elements of damages is prejudicial error, since it is impossible to say of what items the verdict is made up.[61] Appellant is entitled to complain of objectionable testimony which goes to the amount of damages notwithstanding the fact that he did not object to the verdict as being excessive.[61.5]

jury find that plaintiff is not entitled to recover any damages[71] or the issue to which the improper evidence related;[72] or where no specific finding as to damages is made on such issue;[73] or the question of damages is not reached and considered by the jury.[74]

Exemplary damages. The erroneous admission of evidence as to exemplary or punitive damages is harmless where actual damages only are awarded.[75]

Waiver. Where it cannot be determined whether or not the incompetent evidence affected the amount of damages, error in admitting incompetent evidence which would only affect the amount of the verdict is not waived by a failure to object specifically to the excessiveness of the verdict.[75.5]

(2) Remittitur

Error in admitting evidence as to the measure of damages may generally be cured by a remittitur or reduction of the amount of the damages, but not in such situations as where the extent to which the jury were influenced by the improper evidence cannot be shown.

Error in the admission of evidence bearing on the measure of damages is cured by an order reducing the amount awarded to a sum to which the successful party is clearly entitled,[76] where the item of damages in respect of which the improper evidence was introduced is remitted from the verdict recovered,[77] or where more than any possible increase because of the error is remitted from the verdict.[78]

Such error, however, cannot be cured by remittitur where there is nothing in the evidence by which

Issue of negligence

The rule stated in the text is ordinarily true; but where the complaining party claims that the rulings on evidence as to damages not only were erroneous on such issue but also were prejudicial on the issue of negligence, because of the nature of the evidence admitted, an appellate court will consider an assignment of error as to damages although the question of damages was not reached and considered by the jury.

Admission of American Experience Table of Mortality held harmless error, although plaintiff in action for personal injuries failed to show conclusively that he sustained permanent injuries, where ends of justice would be best served by entering a remittitur and closing the litigation.

the excessive portion of the verdict can be segregated from the damages to be allowed,[79] where there is no possibility of showing to what extent the jury were influenced by such improper evidence,[80] or where the only evidence to prove the fact on which the excess was based was that improperly admitted and it was in no sense cumulative.[80.5] A remittitur cannot stand where the verdict is based on improper or prejudicial error.[80.10]

§ 1737. —— By Withdrawal, Striking Out, or Instructions to Jury

a. By withdrawal or striking out
b. By withdrawal and instructions to disregard
c. By instructions

a. By Withdrawal or Striking Out

(1) In general
(2) Requisites of withdrawal or striking out

(1) In General

Error in admitting evidence is generally cured where it is distinctly withdrawn or stricken by the court, except where the prejudicial effect of the evidence on the jury manifestly remained despite its exclusion and influenced their verdict.

"It is . . . the right [and] the duty of a court to correct an error arising from the erroneous admission of evidence when the error is discovered,"[81] and the general rule is that, if evidence erroneously admitted during the progress of a trial is distinctly stricken out or withdrawn by the court from the consideration of the jury, the error is cured,[82] especially where the evidence is not ob-been made upon the minds of the jury by the illegal and improper testimony that its subsequent withdrawal will not remove the effect caused by its admission;[87] these have been said to be extreme instances.[87.5] Furthermore, it has been held that error in admitting improper evidence is not cured by striking it, unless it "appears" that such evidence did not affect the verdict,[88] or unless the striking is accompanied by an instruction to disregard the evidence.[89]

(2) Requisites of Withdrawal or Striking Out

To effect a cure, the withdrawal must be definite, explicit, unequivocal, and as broad as the admission; it may be made on the motion of the court or at a party's request.

In order to effect a cure of error in admitting evidence, the withdrawal thereof must be as broad as the admission,[90] sufficiently definite to identify clearly the evidence to be withdrawn,[91] and so explicit and unequivocal as to preclude the inference that the jury may have been influenced by the evidence;[92] and it must be made in the presence of, or communicated to, the jury.[93] Moreover, the withdrawal must be by act of court and not of counsel;[94] but it may be made on the motion of the court itself or at the request of a party,[95] and it has been held

Failure to register car

In an action for damages in a collision with an automobile, the admission of evidence as to the failure to register the car and place the number thereon is not cured by the attempt to withdraw the matter from the jury.

(2) A question whether a witness for will contestants knew of the bar association grievance committee's finding of improper conduct of attorney, testifying for proponent, is reversible error, although stricken on objection.

Mich.—In re Fine's Estate, 228 N.W. 687, 249 Mich. 391.

Testimony volunteered against admonition

After an admonition that the matter of insurance should not be brought into the case, plaintiff's volunteering information, while testifying in his own behalf, that defendant said he carried indemnity insurance, although stricken out by court, is reversible error.

Error in admission of a medical certificate of death as prima facie evidence of suicide is not cured by the fact that a coroner's verdict that the death wound was self-inflicted attached to plaintiff's proofs of death was excluded.

Minn.—Backstrom v. New York Life Ins. Co., 236 N.W. 708, 183 Minn. 384.

Striking out definition but admitting testimony of fact

Erroneous admission of testimony that plaintiff was suffering from insanity, irrationality, and traumatic neurosis is not cured by the action of the court in striking out a detailed statement of the "factors" of traumatic neurosis, where there is other testimony not stricken that plaintiff was suffering from traumatic neurosis, since the action of the court in striking out the definition of a thing does not cure the error in admitting testimony as to the thing itself.

Insufficiency of exclusion not waived

(1) The insufficiency of an attempt to exclude evidence that had been erroneously admitted, so as to remove its prejudicial effect, was not waived by the excepting party's failure to deny its sufficiency, upon the party causing the admission of the evidence stating that, if the other was not satisfied with the exclusion, he would have the questions and answers read by the stenographer.

Ala.—Watson v. Adams, 65 So. 528, 187 Ala. 490, Ann.Cas.1916E 565.

(2) That appellant may complain that the prejudice from admission of improper evidence was not removed, it was not necessary that he should have called the trial judge's attention to the insufficiency of his withdrawal thereof from the jury's consideration.

S.C.—Templeton v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 108 S.E. 363, 117 S.C. 44.

Mere direction as to record

A mere formal direction that the record should show that testimony impeaching a witness was excluded before the case went to the jury does not cure error in rulings in plaintiff's favor on the impeaching questions.

that a withdrawal by counsel after a motion is made to exclude the evidence is sufficient.[96]

b. By Withdrawal and Instructions to Disregard

Error in admitting evidence is generally cured by withdrawing it with an instruction to the jury to disregard it, unless the evidence is so impressive that its prejudicial effect on the minds of the jury cannot be thus removed.

The general rule is that, if inadmissible evidence has been received during a trial, the error of its admission is cured by its being subsequently withdrawn or stricken out before the close of the trial and by an instruction being given to the jury to disregard it,[97]

Withdrawal by party

(1) Where defendant's counsel objected to improper evidence offered by plaintiff, but it went in on assurance of plaintiff's counsel that it would be made relevant, and plaintiff later withdrew it, and there was no further objection or exception by defendant, no reversible error appears.
Ala.—Alabama Power Co. v. Alford, 97 So. 224, 210 Ala. 98.

(2) Where questions objected to by defendant were withdrawn by plaintiff with court's permission, there was no reversible error.
Ga.—New York Life Ins. Co. v. Jennings, 6 S.E.2d 431, 61 Ga.App. 557.

(3) Where trial court erroneously admitted evidence submitted by plaintiffs, but subsequently sustained objection thereto, and plaintiffs withdrew evidence, initial ruling admitting evidence was not prejudicial.
Ala.—Bear v. Swift & Co., 68 So.2d 718, 259 Ala. 668.

Striking preliminary evidence

Evidence whose admissibility depends on other evidence subsequently to be introduced may be stricken out by the trial court, on motion, or of its own volition, where the later evidence is not forthcoming.

evidence is deliberately offered prior to adjournment of the court for the day, and the withdrawal and instruction are made the next day.[2]

In any event, whether error in admitting evidence is cured depends on the circumstances under which the evidence was given and its probable effect on the jury,[2.5] and whether or not the improper reception of evidence is prejudicial depends on the relation of the evidence withdrawn to all the evidence in the case, how long it is left with the jury, and the surrounding circumstances.[3]

Where the incompetent evidence thus admitted is the only evidence bearing directly on the question at issue, its withdrawal by instructions will not cure the error.[4] Where, however, there is other evidence to support the verdict, it will be presumed that the instructions were obeyed and the error, in its admission, is cured.[5]

The withdrawal or cautionary instruction in such a case must be absolute and positive,[6] and broad

Evidence received de bene esse

When party offering evidence, which is received de bene esse, fails to furnish necessary connecting links, a distinct ruling which lays the defective evidence out of the case will leave the objecting party no substantial cause for complaint unless evidence improperly received is so prejudicial that striking it, coupled with such instruction, will not cure its wrongful admission.

Directing stenographer to strike

Error in admitting evidence of statement of engineer some time after the accident to plaintiff brakeman, that the accident was due to the fault of the conductor in calling plaintiff brakeman down from the car, on the establishment of which fact plaintiff's case depended, is not cured by the judge later directing the stenographer to strike out "such declarations as the engineer and conductor made" and then telling the jury, "Don't consider that testimony that I told the stenographers to strike out."

(a) General Rules

Under most authorities, error in admitting evidence may be cured by an instruction which directs the jury to disregard the improper evidence, or which has the effect of removing from the minds of the jury the prejudicial or harmful effect of such evidence.

The practice of permitting illegal evidence to go to the jury, and afterward endeavoring, by the giving of oral or written directions, to divert their minds from the consideration of such evidence has been said to be one that cannot be proved effective and should not be encouraged,[8] and, according to some decisions, such error cannot be cured by an instruction merely to disregard the improper evidence.[9] Nevertheless, the general rule deducible from the weight of authority is that error in the admission of evidence may be cured by an instruction to disregard, or not to consider, the evidence improperly admitted,[10] the view being taken that

Injury to insured

In an action on an accident policy, error in admitting testimony of insured's physician, as to what insured said as to the cause of his sickness being a fall while on a train, was not rendered harmless by an instruction that the jury could not consider testimony that the fall was caused by a sudden starting of the train, the vice of the evidence being the mentioning of the train, which brought the injury within the terms of the policy.

Ohio.—Baillie v. Heimsath, 151 N.E. 788, 20 Ohio App. 216.

Care and caution are to be exercised in the delicate, difficult, and mportant matter of removing the prejudicial effect of evidence improperly admitted, the burden of which rests upon the party causing its admission, and no duty rests upon the other party in that connection after seasonably and properly reserving his exception to its admission.

As to damages

It has been held, however, that in an action for failure to furnish adequate electric power pursuant to contract, admitting testimony regarding inadequate power furnished previous to the contract's execution is reversible error, where the jury were not instructed to disregard it, although the court stated that damages could not be recovered for a period antedating the contract.

resulted from its reception.[12.5] Such an instruction may be oral as well as in writing.[13]

According to some decisions, error in the admission of illegal evidence can be cured only by its being explicitly withdrawn, as by a direct and unequivocal charge to the jury that they must disregard the illegal evidence.[14] On the other hand, it has been held in many cases that an error in admitting improper evidence may be cured by an instruction which in effect directs or impels the jury to disregard such evidence;[15] which renders it imma-

Mass.—Conry v. Boston & M. R. R., 116 N.E. 733, 227 Mass. 411.

Hearsay

An instruction that an expert opinion is merely advisory, and before giving it any value facts on which it was based must be found true, does not cure the erroneous admission of a physician's hearsay evidence that plaintiff's condition was caused by a blow, where such evidence is not withdrawn nor the jury warned against considering hearsay as proof of the facts.

Mo.—Kinchlow v. Kansas City, K. V. & W. Ry. Co., 264 S.W. 416.

Instruction improperly modified

In an action for a broker's commission, where evidence of fraud in procuring the contract had been admitted improperly, in that fraud was not pleaded by defendant, plaintiffs' offered instruction "that there is no evidence in this case that any fraud was practiced upon the defendant * * * in procuring him to sign the written list of the land read in evidence" was improperly modified by striking out the additional clause, "and you will disregard and not be influenced in any manner by the testimony offered in the case for the purpose of showing such alleged facts, nor by any statement of counsel in regard thereto," and such error was prejudicial to plaintiffs' rights.

for reversing a judgment if the court afterward peremptorily instructs the jury that it is insufficient to establish the fact for which it was introduced,[21] or that the facts sought to be established by such testimony, if proved, would not warrant a recovery, or constitute a defense, as the case may be.[22]

Error in admitting incompetent evidence, however, is not cured by giving an instruction showing that it is incompetent or irrelevant, where the effect is to mislead the jury to the prejudice of a party;[23] or by giving an instruction as to the weight to be given to the improper evidence,[24] as by instructing that such evidence is not conclusive,[25] or is of a doubtful character;[26] or by giving an instruction which is not responsive to the evidence,[27] which does not clearly indicate what, if any, evidence is to be disregarded,[28] which amounts to nothing more than a qualified direction to disregard the evidence,[29] which is not specific in character and which is not given until after the argument;[30] or which is not sufficient to overcome the influence of the testimony on the jury;[31] or where it is not clear that the remarks relating to the evidence were intended as instructions to the jury or that the jury would have been warranted in accepting and acting on them as such.[32]

(b) As to Damages

Error in admitting improper evidence on the question of damages is cured by an instruction fully stating the correct rule for assessing damages, and eliminating the improper evidence from consideration or stating the matters to be considered in fixing damages, not including items on which the improper evidence has been admitted.

Where all the evidence introduced on the question of damages was erroneously admitted, such error cannot be entirely removed by instructions.[32.50]

In an action for damages to an automobile, the admission of evidence as to the value of the time lost by plaintiff as a result of the collision is cured by an instruction to the jury to limit the damages to recovery for the loss of the automobile.

Injury to earning capacity

In an action for injuries sustained in an automobile collision, admission of testimony on damages to injured party's diminished capacity to earn livelihood, if any, is harmless where the court instructs to the effect that, in determining the extent of the injury, the jury are not to consider any merely possible damages or results or conditions, if any, and that they should disregard all testimony as to any possible future development.

S.C.—Johnston v. Life & Casualty Ins. Co., 7 S.E.2d 463, 192 S.C. 518.

Insurance

The admission in evidence of a rider showing that both defendants were covered by an automobile liability policy is not reversible error in an automobile accident case, where the court limits the evidence to the issue then involved as to ownership of the truck and thereafter withdraws the evidence from the jury when that issue passes out of the case.

Ohio.—Reserve Trucking Co. v. Fairchild, 191 N.E. 745, 128 Ohio St. 519.

Letter

In a depositor's action against his bank for refusal to honor a check, the admission in evidence of a letter from plaintiff depositor's attorney to the bank, stating that he was handling a claim against the bank for dence is not admissible for any purpose,[37] or is so radically wrong and of such a prejudicial character that it must be assumed that injury resulted.[38]

Such error is not cured by an instruction which limits consideration of the improper evidence to an immaterial issue,[39] or to a matter not in issue;[40] or which limits its consideration as throwing light on the only issues in the case,[41] or accentuates the prejudicial effect of the improper evidence,[42] or otherwise improperly or insufficiently limits its scope.[43] So, also, the giving of an instruction which limits the consideration of evidence to a designated purpose for which the evidence may properly be considered does not cure error in admitting such evidence generally where another instruction advises the jury that they may consider the evidence for a purpose for which it is not admissible.[44]

(3) Submitting Proper Issues and Ignoring Others

Error in admitting evidence is cured where the instructions submit only the specific issue or issues in the case, and not the issue on which the evidence was improperly admitted.

Error in admitting evidence is cured where the instructions of the court direct the attention of the jury only to the specific issue or issues in the case,[45] and do not submit to the jury the issue sought to be proved by the improper evidence.[46] damages for refusal to honor the check, under instructions not to consider the letter as evidence for any purpose except to show when the bank had notice of the depositor's claim, is not reversible error, although it would have been better to have had only the material portion of it read to the jury.

Parts of deposition against codefendant

Where a deposition of one defendant taken in another case is offered as an admission against interest as to such defendant alone, this did not justify the introduction of many parts of the deposition which relate wholly to the liability of his codefendant, such parts being easily separable; and, such parts being highly injurious, their prejudicial effect could not be removed by the court's oral direction to the jury, at the close of plaintiff's case, not to consider anything in the deposition as to such codefendant.

Such error, however, is not cured by such an instruction where it is on another branch of the case,[47] or where the evidence thus improperly admitted must have been misleading to the jury and prejudicial to the complaining party.[48] So, also, where the testimony legally before the jury does not warrant their verdict, the ignoring in the charge of testimony erroneously admitted does not cure the error in its admission.[49]

(4) Withdrawing Issue on Which Evidence Improperly Admitted

Withdrawal of allegation

Error in admitting evidence to support a particular allegation of negligence is ordinarily cured by the withdrawal of such allegation.

missed,[51] error in the admission of such evidence is cured; and this is especially so where the improper evidence is also withdrawn or the jury are instructed to disregard it.[52] Error in admitting evidence concerning particular items of damages is cured where such items are withdrawn or excluded from the consideration of the jury.[53]

Similarly, the erroneous admission of evidence is not prejudicial where the court instructs the jury to the effect that the question on which such evidence was admitted is not in issue,[54] is out of the case,[55] or has been eliminated.[56]

On the other hand, where evidence wholly inadmissible is as much applicable to one of two causes of action or issues alleged as to the other, or is of such a character that the court cannot say that it had no influence in the determination of the issues submitted, the error is not cured by the mere withdrawal of one of the causes of action or issues which it was offered to support;[57] nor is it cured where, although the issue on which it was admitted is withdrawn, the court instructs the jury that the evidence may be considered, but cautions them as to its use.[58]

§ 1738. —— By Amendment of Pleadings

Error in admitting evidence not competent under the pleadings is cured by an amendment of the pleadings which renders it competent.

Error in admitting evidence which is not competent under the pleadings is cured by a subsequent amendment of the pleadings, by permission of the court, rendering the evidence admissible.[59]

12. Exclusion of Evidence

§ 1739. Prejudicial Effect in General

If the exclusion of evidence did not prejudice the complaining party, and could not have affected the result, the error is harmless.

Generally, the exclusion of competent material evidence on a question in issue is reversible error,[60] unless the facts are undisputed or the evi-

Cross action dismissed

Where a contract is introduced in evidence to support defendant's cross action, error, if any, in the introduction of such evidence, is rendered harmless, where the cross action is dismissed.

Tex.—Kanner v. Starts, Civ.App., 203 S.W. 603, error refused.

Dismissal of one count

Error in the admission of evidence applicable only to one count is harmless, where such count is dismissed by plaintiff, and no element of liability thereunder is submitted to the jury.

Hearsay of questionable character

Judgment will not be reversed for exclusion of hearsay testimony of a questionable character by interested parties in plaintiff's behalf in an action involving an alleged agreement to adopt with right of inheritance.

Cal.—Erickson v. Geranson, 11 P.2d 907, 123 C.A. 575.

Introductory evidence

Rejection of evidence which was simply introductory was harmless to plaintiff.

Md.—Epstein v. Ruppert, 99 A. 685, 129 Md. 432.

Manner of making objection

Where the objection was sustained, error could not be predicated on the fact that an objection to evidence stated no ground.

Iowa.—Mitchell v. Beck, 156 N.W. 428, 178 Iowa 786, rehearing denied 160 N.W. 232, 178 Iowa 786.

Possession of liquor

Appellate court could not assume jurors in an automobile collision suit were prejudiced against defendant by excluded evidence that defendant had possessed a liquor flask and was intoxicated, or that such evidence affected the amount of the verdict.

Ariz.—Beals v. Quigg, 11 P.2d 354, 49 Ariz. 196.

Rejecting photograph of the place where an accident occurred did not constitute prejudicial error, where there was nothing shown in the photograph that was in dispute.

To secure a reversal for the exclusion of evidence, it must have been admissible when offered,[71] and, although admissible when offered, if subsequent evidence would require that it be stricken, the refusal to admit it is harmless error.[72]

§ 1740. —— Evidence Immaterial to Issue

The exclusion of immaterial evidence is harmless error and not ground for reversal.

Where the evidence is immaterial, its exclusion is not ground for reversal,[73] even if it would have have been erroneous.[74] Where excluded evidence is not material unless other proof is made, and no evidence is received or offered to establish that proof, such exclusion will not justify a reversal.[75] The exclusion of evidence material, if at all, only on an issue which the court might have withdrawn from the jury is not prejudicial.[76] Where the evidence offered does not tend to prove any issue in the case, its exclusion, even for an improper reason, is not prejudicial error.[77]

§ 1741. —— Evidence Not Beneficial to Appellant

It is not prejudicial error to exclude evidence which could be of no benefit to the complaining party.

If the testimony could have been of no benefit to the complaining party, its exclusion is not prejudicial error.[78] Thus where evidence offered by a

Quantum of damages

On plaintiff's appeal from a judgment awarding him damages for illness caused by eating food containing a dead insect, as insufficient in amount, exclusion of a companion's testimony that similar articles of food served him by defendant at the same time, made him sick was immaterial error, such testimony shedding no light on quantum of damages.

Closing of contract

In an action to recover damages for a breach of contract to purchase a car of canned fish, the exclusion of evidence offered by buyer of a local custom that the buyer of canned goods does not consider the contract closed until a formal contract has been signed between the parties, while the evidence was probably competent, was not reversible error, where its weight was insufficient to affect materially the result.

Tenn.—Neilson & Kittle Canning Co. v. F. G. Lowe & Co., 260 S.W. 142, 149 Tenn. 561.

Hearsay

In trespass to try title, any error in excluding certain testimony as hearsay was immaterial, probative value of testimony being small.

Tex.—Ferguson v. Coleman, Civ.App., 208 S.W. 571.

Signature many years before

Any error in exclusion of testimony as to whether sixty-five years before the trial, when witnesses were ten or twelve years old, a person had, or signed his name with, a middle initial was harmless, since such testimony as against the documentary evidence would have had so little weight that it would not sustain a verdict.

mining the case,[82] or tends to prove the issue in favor of his adversary,[83] the exclusion of such evidence is not prejudicial if no other evidence as to the fact is either introduced or offered.[84] Also the exclusion of evidence in behalf of appellant is not prejudicial where other evidence in the case conclusively establishes the contrary of what appellant sought to prove by such evidence.[85]

On the other hand, the exclusion of evidence which may form a link in the chain of testimony is error, although it may not be sufficient of itself to establish the proposition for which it is offered,[86] and even though at the time no disclosure is made by counsel of an intention to prove the additional facts to establish such proposition.[87] The mere fact that the rejected evidence would have been futile if received does not show that its rejection was not prejudicial, because the proposer might have introduced other evidence or have otherwise changed his course at the trial if the ruling of the court had been right and his rejected evidence had been received.[88] Similarly, the fact that the objecting party has not made a case for the jury does not negative the presumption of prejudice, for his failure to make a case may be the result of the error complained of.[89]

§ 1742. —— Evidence Improper for Purpose Offered

The exclusion of evidence improper for the purpose for which it is offered is not prejudicial error.

When evidence is offered for a particular purpose, its rejection is not reversible error because it is admissible for another purpose not called to the attention of the court,[90] especially where such other purpose is wholly inconsistent with the theory on which the proponent is trying the action,[91] or where the evidence, if received, could have but slight effect.[92]

§ 1743. —— Evidence Offered for Improper Purpose

It is not prejudicial error to exclude evidence offered for an improper purpose.

It is not reversible error to exclude evidence offered to establish a void transaction,[93] or as introductory to other evidence which was in itself inadmissible.[94]

§ 1744. —— Facts Which Are Matters of Common Knowledge

It is harmless error to exclude evidence of facts which are matters of common knowledge.

It is harmless error to exclude evidence of obvious facts,[95] especially where the fact sought to be shown is not on the main issue.[96]

§ 1745. —— Effect of Determination

An error in improperly excluding evidence may be rendered harmless by the findings of the court or jury.

The findings of the court or jury may render harmless an improper exclusion of evidence.[97] Thus

Testamentary capacity

Erroneous exclusion of testimony on grounds other than those to which the excluded evidence relates,[98] where the court or jury find as a fact the matter which such evidence would have tended to show,[99] or where a verdict for the party offering the evidence is set aside for reasons not growing out of the rejection of the evidence.[1]

Where the jury find against the existence of a fact, the exclusion of evidence assuming its existence becomes nonprejudicial.[2] Similarly, when an issue of fact is determined in favor of the excepting party, the exclusion of evidence offered by him on that issue is not prejudicial[3] unless it appears that the excluded evidence tended to increase or to diminish in his favor the results of the finding.[4] Exclusion of evidence, although erroneous, is rendered immaterial by a finding on an issue which renders the exclusion of such evidence immaterial.[5]

Exclusion of evidence material only on the question of damages is harmless where the jury find for defendant on the merits,[6] where a verdict is directed of an attesting witness as to testamentary capacity was without prejudice, in view of a finding of undue influence.

the appellate court will not reverse for erroneous rulings excluding evidence,[11] unless there was evidence excluded which should have been admitted, and which, if admitted and viewed in its most favorable light,[12] would have justified and required a different conclusion.[13] In equity cases where the appellate court renders such judgment as the pleadings and evidence warrant, the erroneous exclusion of evidence preserved in the record is harmless error,[14] particularly where the decree was for the right party.[15]

If, however, material evidence is excluded, and is not a part of the record before the appellate court, the error is not harmless.[16]

§ 1747. Appellant Not Entitled to Favorable Decision in Any Event

Where the complaining party is not entitled to a favorable decision in any event, an erroneous exclusion of evidence is harmless error.

Generally, the improper exclusion of evidence is harmless error where the complaining party would not have been entitled to a favorable decision in any event.[17] Thus, in an action for personal injuries harmless where it appears that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence barring recovery,[18] or where plaintiff failed to show that intestate was exercising due care when killed.[19] Similarly, where plaintiff fails to sustain his case, any error in excluding evidence offered by defendant is harmless, since in such case no disproof is necessary.[20]

§ 1748. Facts Otherwise Established

Where the facts sought to be proved are otherwise established, an erroneous exclusion of evidence may be rendered harmless.

Although there is error in the exclusion of evidence, it may be unprejudicial and not cause for reversal,[21] as where the exclusion of evidence complained of affected only the question of damages, and the rule of damages adopted by the trial court was correct;[22] where the facts sought to be established by the evidence excluded were subsequently admitted into evidence by the adverse party;[23] where the direct and that excluded is indirect.[29] Thus, where a written instrument is already in evidence, it is harmless error to deny a party the privilege of showing matters contained therein, either by oral testimony[30] or by deposition;[31] and conversely the exclusion of documentary evidence is harmless, where testimony has already been given concerning the contents thereof or the matters sought to be shown thereby.[32] Error in excluding photographs will not operate to reverse, where they were merely supplemental to the oral testimony.[33]

In accordance with the rule, it is also frequently held to be error without prejudice to exclude questions and answers which, because of the same witness having already given identically or substantially the same testimony, would amount to a mere repetition;[34] or where the witness has testified to the

§ 1749. —— By Other Evidence

Where the facts sought to be proved are clearly established by other evidence, an erroneous exclusion of evidence is harmless error.

No prejudicial error results from the erroneous exclusion of admissible evidence, where the fact sought to be proved or disproved by such evidence is clearly established by other evidence,[38] where the Matters considered

Mistaken exclusion of legally admissible evidence is not necessarily rendered harmless by event that its subject matter could be inferred from other evidence which was received or that its import otherwise came to jury's general intention, but influential character and relationship of proffered evidence to material point in controversy and substantiality of right of party to have it admitted are considerations of paramount significance, and such considerations must be viewed in light of the entire case.

Photographs

In action for injuries to a section hand riding on a railway motor car which collided with an automobile, the exclusion of photographs of the scene of the accident was not prejudicial error, where several other photographs of the same location were in evidence and the only difference was that, in the photographs excluded, the motor car was shown at various places on the track.

sufficient evidence.[40]

Illustration of the application of this principle is found in holdings that, where the fact in question is otherwise sufficiently established, no prejudicial effect attaches to the erroneous action of the court in limiting cross-examination[41] or the number of witnesses;[42] that the rejection of the testimony of an interested witness is not prejudicial, where testimony regarding the same fact is given by disinterested witnesses;[43] and that the exclusion of documentary evidence is harmless error, where the contents thereof, or the claim sought to be supported or defeated by such evidence, is clearly established by other evidence.[44]

The rule, however, applies only where the fact involved is clearly established by other evidence, and not where the evidence is conflicting.[45] Where the evidence excluded is of greater probative value than that admitted, the error in excluding it is ground for reversal.[46]

§ 1750. —— By Facts Conceded

Where the facts are conceded, an erroneous exclusion of evidence tending to establish such facts is harmless error.

§ 1751. —— By Presumptions of Law or Judicial Notice

The exclusion of evidence of facts which the law presumes or the existence of which judicial notice is taken is harmless error.

No prejudicial error results from the exclusion of evidence of a fact which the law presumes,[52] or of which judicial notice is required to be taken.[53]

§ 1752. Subsequent Matters Curing Error

Subsequent events occurring during the trial may render an erroneous exclusion of evidence harmless.

Evidence subsequently brought out in the trial may render a previous erroneous exclusion of evidence harmless.[54] Also, where an opportunity is later given to introduce the excluded evidence, in the absence of circumstances causing prejudice, the error is harmless,[55] and the error may be cured although the excluded evidence is not actually admitted,[56] if the party offering it is subsequently given an opportunity to introduce it, either by express offer and permission of the court,[57] or by the adverse party's withdrawing of his objection,[58] since the party is deemed to waive the original error when he refuses to accept full reparation thereof.[59]

§ 1753. —— By Admission of Same or Similar Evidence

Generally, an erroneous exclusion of evidence may be rendered harmless by the admission of the same or similar evidence.

It is a general rule that a party is not harmed and may not complain of error in the exclusion of certain evidence, when the same, or substantially the same, evidence is subsequently admitted,[60] it bejected oral evidence may be supplied by documentary evidence,[64] the rule having special application where the evidence subsequently admitted is of a higher and better nature than that excluded.[65] To effect a cure of the error, however, the subsequent evidence must be substantially the same as that excluded,[66] must be admitted for the same purpose,[67] and must not itself be taken from the jury; if this is done, the error is clearly prejudicial and a ground for new trial.[68]

Through same witness. The rule that error in the rejection of evidence is cured by the subsequent reception of the same evidence finds its most frequent application in cases where substantially the same testimony as that objected to and excluded is elicited from the same witness on further examination.[69] Error in rejecting competent evidence is not

Answer immediately thereafter

Ala.—Pettus v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 106 So. 807, 214 Ala. 187.

Improper question

Sustaining an objection to a leading question was not prejudicial, where the court permitted witness to answer the question when properly put.

Ky.—Mann v. Woodward, 290 S.W. 333, 217 Ky. 491.

Refusal of deposition

Where there were no substantial inconsistencies between plaintiff's testimony and his deposition taken by defendants, the exclusion of such deposition was not prejudicial error.

Wash.—Lashbrook v. Spokane-Wallace Stages, 10 P.2d 241, 168 Wash. 24.

Subsequently improperly admitted

Where, in a personal injury case, declarations of plaintiff an hour after the accident as to the manner of its occurrence were improperly rejected when offered as substantive evidence as part of res gestæ, defendant was not prejudiced when they were subsequently received for the purpose of corroborating plaintiff as witness, although not admissible for such purpose.

The rule that the improper exclusion of evidence is harmless where it appears that similar evidence was introduced without objection does not necessarily apply when the evidence is brought out on cross-examination, since the probative force of testimony is often affected by the manner in which it is elicited.

Adverse effect on jury

The fact that, before an objection to a question asked a witness could be interposed and ruled upon, the witness had given a negative reply, did not render a subsequent erroneous ruling of the court sustaining the objection harmless, since the practical effect thereof was to exclude such testimony and it was clearly so understood by the jury.

particular phase of a matter is ruled out, but the witness is later allowed to tell all he knows about the matter;[76] where the whole testimony of a witness is excluded, but he is subsequently permitted to testify;[77] and where the testimony is by deposition instead of in open court.[78]

Nevertheless, where the testimony admitted is not as broad or as comprehensive as that excluded,[79] or where the jury are shown to be confused by their rejection and subsequent admission,[80] the error still remains.

Through other witnesses. No prejudicial error results from the exclusion of particular evidence when the facts sought to be elicited are subsequently covered in full by the testimony of other witnesses,[81] provided the credibility of such witnesses is

Matter withdrawn

Erroneous exclusion of evidence of defendant's intimidation of a witness was not rendered harmless by the witness' answer, where the objection was sustained and the matter withdrawn from the jury.

Subsequent evidence not responsive to question

Where the makers allegedly delivered a note to a third party solely for his signature, and the third party, without signing the note, delivered the note to the payee, a refusal in the payee's action on the note to permit the makers to testify that they did not intend that the note should be delivered to the payee without a third party's signature was reversible error which was not cured by the answer of one of the makers without the objection that he would not have signed the note had he known that a third party was going to deliver the note to the payee without signing it, where the answer was not responsive to the question.

The error in the exclusion of a question on cross-examination to defendant's treasurer, called as a witness for plaintiff, was not cured by allowing defendant to give the evidence in its defense, since one has a right to have the direct and cross-examinations placed in direct contrast before the jury.

§ 1754. —— By Instructions

An erroneous exclusion of evidence may be rendered harmless by instructions to the jury.

The trial court, in its instructions to the jury, may cure whatever error it may have committed in ruling out evidence,[89] as where it so defines the issues and, if involved in the case, the grounds of liability as to render the excluded evidence immaterial and outside the issues,[90] or where it assumes the existence or proof of the fact sought to be established by the evidence in question and thus gives the party all the benefit which he could have derived from its admission.[91]

On the other hand, the error is not eradicated, but is aggravated, by instructions which lay emphasis on the fact which the excluded evidence would have tended to prove or to disprove.[92]

Failure to admit ordinance

(1) Where plaintiff was injured while riding on the running board of an automobile, the refusal to admit an ordinance prohibiting such riding was not error, where the court included the ordinance in its instructions.

(3) Where the court instructed the jury that, as a matter of law, it was conclusively established that note was obtained by fraud and was without consideration, and that the only issue submitted was whether plaintiff was an innocent purchaser, any errors in refusing requested instructions and in admitting and excluding evidence and the like, not concerning issue of innocent holder, were immaterial.

§ 1755. Dismissal

If no prejudice to the rights of the complaining party resulted from an error in dismissal or failure to dismiss, the error is not ground for reversal, but reversal generally follows a showing that such an error was prejudicial.

Nonprejudicial error committed by the trial court in acting on a motion to dismiss is not ground for reversal.[93] Accordingly, an erroneous refusal to dismiss is not ground for reversal when the substantial rights of appellant have not been prejudiced,[94] as where an error in refusing to dismiss for want of sufficient proof was cured by evidence subsequently introduced by either party,[95] or by defendant's subsequently admitting liability.[96]

Also, where the final decree dismissed the bill as requested in the motion, which was erroneously denied,[97] or where error in refusing to dismiss a second cause of action set up by amendment was cured by plaintiff's voluntarily dismissing such cause of action and proceeding to trial on the original cause of action,[98] the error is harmless. Any error in denying plaintiff's motion to dismiss a complaint of intervention for delay in prosecution is harmless, where the court, on its own motion, dismissed the entire action on the same ground and plaintiff did not appeal from the latter order.[99] On the other hand, a refusal to dismiss the complaint against a party against whom there was not a particle of evidence is a reversible error.[1]

The erroneous dismissal of an action will not operate to reverse when not prejudicial,[2] as where it

Notice of motion

Failure to give eight days' notice of motion to dismiss action for failure to give security for costs as required by statute would be at most a mere irregularity not prejudicial to plaintiff.
Wis.—Sheldon v. Nick & Sons, 33 N.W.2d 260, 253 Wis. 162.

Notice to members of class

Even though order of dismissal of stockholder's derivative action without prejudice was a violation of superior court rule requiring that in certain class actions no order of dismissal could be entered without notice given to all members of class, where no injustice was done to any party by such dismissal, violation of rule would not be ground for reversal.
Ill.—Minarik v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 139 N.E.2d 854, 12 Ill.App.2d 410.

Rule invoked immaterial

Whether trial court considered judgment of dismissal proper under rule relating to judgment on pleadings or under rule relating to summary judgment was immaterial if defendant was entitled to judgment under either rule.

Forum non conveniens

Failure to dismiss action which was dismissable on ground of forum non conveniens was not reversible error in view of time and expense already devoted to case and impracticability of exhausting appellate remedies before expiration of period of limitations.

operated in favor of appellant,[3] where there has been a settlement and there is nothing further to litigate,[4] or where plaintiff is not entitled to recover.[5]

On the other hand, however, an erroneous dismissal, which was prejudicial, is ground for a reversal.[6] A refusal to dismiss an action on timely motion by plaintiff is prejudicial error,[6.5] and where the motion has been granted it may be prejudicial error to reinstate the case on the application of third persons in the absence of a showing of incapacity of plaintiff at the time of dismissal.[6.10] Where the first of two suits between the same parties on the same cause of action had been dismissed on plaintiff's motion after the court indicated its intention to sustain a demurrer to the complaint, it is not prejudicial error to reinstate the first suit on motion of defendant, and to dismiss the second suit.[6.15]

Failure to consider alternative right
Where complaint sought to establish either a mechanic's lien or an equitable lien for reasonable value of services rendered and money advanced by plaintiff in the improvement of realty, dismissing suit with prejudice on ground that relation between the parties appeared to be a joint venture and that such relation was not compatible with existence of a mechanic's lien under statute without determining whether plaintiff was entitled to an equitable lien constituted reversible error.
Fla.—Green v. Putnam, 93 So.2d 378.

Neglect in entering judgment
It has been held that on appeal from an erroneous judgment dismissing plaintiff's complaint for neglect in entering judgment, a contention that plaintiff was not injured because the judgment may be set aside if, on appeal, it is found that there was evidence to support his demands, is unavailing, for it assumes that, on appeal from the order of dismissal, the court may consider the case as though a judgment of nonsuit had been entered.

Analysis of evidence
Trial judge's analysis, on defendants' motion for nonsuit, analyzing the evidence and setting forth his reactions thereto, after which he denied the motion for nonsuit, was a ruling or take action respecting,[8] a motion for a nonsuit is harmless if the complaining party is not prejudiced thereby. Accordingly, the erroneous denial of a nonsuit for want of sufficient evidence is harmless error, where subsequently to such denial the defect in plaintiff's proof is supplied by evidence introduced by either party.[9] If, however, the evidence is not supplied,[10] or is supplied only in part,[11] the error is not harmless, unless the verdict is in favor of the movant.[12]

Error in denying a motion for nonsuit is also harmless where the court instructs the jury to find for defendant,[13] or recalls its original action in de-not prejudicial error, on ground that defendants were misled to their detriment and failed to introduce in evidence pertinent testimony.

Discontinuance at close of case

Judgment warranted by evidence
A judgment of nonsuit, acquiesced in by plaintiff, will not be disturbed, on appeal by defendant, on the ground that the judgment should have been more definitely in favor of defendant so as to put an end to the litigation, where the evidence warranted a judgment as favorable to plaintiff as was rendered.

Proof of payment
Where defendant's liability has been established as a matter of law and the only question of fact for the jury is that of damages which would vary with the amount paid on a note and mortgage, although the trial court committed technical error in the denial of defendant's motion for nonsuit for failure to prove nonpayment, yet the judgment will not be reversed where defendant could easily have proved payment.

nying the motion for nonsuit and dismisses the action;[14] where the jury's verdict is for defendant;[15] where the case has subsequently been submitted to a jury, a verdict rendered, and a motion for new trial filed;[16] where a verdict for plaintiff is complained of in the motion for new trial as not supported by the evidence;[17] or where both parties demand a judgment on the merits by final submission of the cause.[18]

Further, there is no prejudicial error where, at the close of the entire case, plaintiff voluntarily withdrew the question of punitive damages in respect of which a motion for nonsuit, at the close of plaintiff's testimony, had been denied;[19] or where a judgment for nonsuit at the close of all the evidence is denied.[20] There is no prejudicial error in denying a nonsuit on a count of the complaint where it was eliminated by statements of plaintiff's counsel and by instructions to the jury,[21] or where the cause of action as to which the nonsuit was denied was withdrawn from the jury's consideration by the charge,[22] or where the judgment is sustainable on another cause of action.[22.5] Refusal to nonsuit one of several plaintiffs on defendant's motion may be harmless where granting the motion would not have altered the result.[22.10]

Conversely, an erroneous granting of a nonsuit is harmless error on appeal where it did not prejudice the complaining party.[23] Accordingly, erroneously granting a nonsuit is harmless where the jury, under proper instructions, would have been bound to find against appellant,[24] where defendant was entitled to have a verdict directed,[25] or where plaintiff's case was so radically defective that it

Nonsuit as to principal
(1) In an action against a father and son for injuries sustained from the son's alleged negligent operation of the father's automobile, the grant of a nonsuit as to the father, if error, was not ground for reversal, where the jury found that the son was not negligent, since the father is only liable on the principle that the son acting as his agent was guilty of negligence.
N.C.—Burris v. Litaker, 107 S.E. 129, 181 N.C. 376.

(2) Likewise, in action for wrongful death of one killed by an automobile, error in nonsuit as to owner of car, who was father of driver, was immaterial, where deceased was found guilty of contributory negligence.
N.C.—Plott v. Howell, 133 S.E. 167, 191 N.C. 832.

could not have been remedied by further proof.[26] Error in granting a nonsuit as to a certain count in the complaint is harmless where everything which might have been claimed by plaintiff under such count was included in and disposed of by the trial.[27]

Error in nonsuiting a cause of action under the common law, thereby limiting plaintiff's right to recover under a special statute, is cured by subsequently submitting to the jury the common-law cause of action.[28] Although a nonsuit was not the proper remedy under the circumstances, if the result obtained was not different from what would have been obtained if the proper remedy were used, the judgment will not be reversed.[29] Likewise, although the trial court should have entered absolute judgment for defendant, instead of nonsuit, in an action on a note, a judgment of nonsuit will be affirmed, where plaintiff alleged, in motion to remand the case, discovery of material evidence which might alter the result.[30]

Since joint tort feasors are jointly and severally liable for the entire injury, in a suit against both, one whose liability has been established cannot complain that the other's motion for nonsuit was sustained.[31]

Where a nonsuit was properly granted, it is not material that the grounds justifying it were not the ones on which the application therefor was based,[32] or that the motion for nonsuit was defective in that it failed to specify fully the weakness of plaintiff's case.[33] Also, the granting of a nonsuit without a formal motion, while irregular, is without prejudice.[34]

On the other hand, if an erroneous granting of a nonsuit prejudiced the rights of the complaining party, the error was not harmless.[35] Accordingly, if there is any evidence sufficient to go to the jury, the granting of the motion for nonsuit is prejudicial error;[36] and it is likewise prejudicial error to grant a nonsuit on admission of counsel for plaintiff that they could not furnish record evidence in support of their cause of action where the cause of action might have been otherwise proved.[37]

In at least one jurisdiction, while it has been held that the mere entry of a nonsuit, even on the merits of a case, renders none of the issues involved res judicata, and hence the nonsuit injures no one, and cannot be assigned as error,[38] it has also been held that the entry of a compulsory nonsuit without giving plaintiff an opportunity to present all his evidence is reversible error.[38.5]

b. Voluntary Nonsuit

Denial of a voluntary nonsuit to which the plaintiff has an absolute right is prejudicial error.

In view of the advantages to plaintiff of a nonsuit over a judgment on a verdict dismissing the complaint, an erroneous refusal to grant plaintiff's voluntary nonsuit is prejudicial and grounds for reversal;[39] and a refusal to permit defendant to dismiss his cross statement of claim before judgment, after permitting plaintiff to dismiss his statement of claim, is prejudicial error.[40] Where, however, no prejudice results to plaintiff, a denial of his motion for a nonsuit is harmless.[40.5]

It is harmless error to allow plaintiff to take a nonsuit after verdict for defendant, since the verdict is still operative as a bar to another action for the same cause,[41] and a refusal to permit an interpleader to take an involuntary nonsuit with leave to move to set it aside instead of submitting the case by peremptory instruction was harmless, where he made no effort to withdraw or dismiss the interplea, and after the verdict was returned made a motion for a new trial, including all of the points made as a reason for a nonsuit.[42]

Likewise, in accordance with the rule that plaintiff may not take a nonsuit where such will prejudice a right defendant may have to a hearing on a claim he has made for affirmative relief, where both plaintiff and defendant sought to have title to land quieted, error in denying plaintiff's motion for nonsuit is harmless.[43] It is not prejudicial after direction of verdict subsequent to the motion for nonsuit, to vacate the direction of verdict and enter an order of nonsuit.[43.5]

§ 1757. Demurrer to Evidence

Error of the trial court in ruling on a demurrer to the evidence is ground for reversal only when prejudice is shown.

A refusal to compel plaintiff to join in a demurrer to his evidence is harmless, even though erroneous, where the evidence set forth in the demurrer shows that plaintiff is entitled to recover.[44] Error in overruling a demurrer to evidence is also harmless where under the circumstances it is not prejudicial,[45] as where evidence supplying the omission is afterward introduced by either party;[46] where the court afterward sets aside its order and allows

Demurrer to evidence sustained

Where a demurrer to plaintiff's evidence is sustained, it is prejudicial error not to allow plaintiff to take a nonsuit, as authorized by statute, although the demurrer was properly sustained, since the purpose of taking a nonsuit is to put plaintiff in a position to bring another action should he desire to do so and be able to furnish more proof.

Kemp v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., App., 251 S.W. 402.

Defective pleading

Prejudicial error was not committed in overruling a demurrer to the evidence which was based on the ground that, although all the elements of plaintiff's cause of action were established by the facts, they had not been pleaded, where no showing was made that defendant had actually been misled, and the petition was amended to conform to the proof by the amplification of allegations which it already contained.
Kan.—Ludlum v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. of Milwaukee, Wis., 214 P. 619, 113 Kan. 333, rehearing overruled 215 P. 282, 113 Kan. 333.

Failure to reduce to writing

Failure to reduce demurrer to evidence to writing at time of announcement was not prejudicial to plaintiff, where it was agreed by counsel that it might be written out later, and where grounds of demurrer were thereafter delivered in writing to plaintiff's counsel and to court.
Va.—Cooper v. Norfolk Southern R. Co., 99 S.E. 606, 125 Va. 73.

Judgment based on all evidence

In trial by court entry of judgment for plaintiff based on the consideration of all of the evidence, and not on plaintiff's demurrer to defendant's evidence, was not reversible error, where the evidence supported the judgment.
Okl.—Merchants' Transfer & Storage Co. v. Ft. Smith Couch & Bedding Co., 232 P. 79, 105 Okl. 195.

Particular circumstances

In action on beneficiary certificate, where association alleged that certificate sued on had been exchanged for another, and beneficiary wholly failed to prove as ground for invalidating the exchange that association knew of insured's alleged insanity at time of exchange, an instruction in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence should have been given, but judgment in favor of beneficiary would not be reversed outright if beneficiary could amend his reply to allege that prior to action he had sought to place association in statu quo by tendering sufficient money to pay assessments that would have become due on certificate sued on up to the time of insured's death.

plaintiff to take a nonsuit, and reinstates the cause;[47] where the verdict was for defendant, who demurred to the evidence;[48] or where a jury was waived and the court resolved the conflict in the evidence in favor of the party whose demurrer was overruled.[49]

Although a demurrer to evidence is not applicable to proceedings in equity, an order sustaining it is not a ground for reversal, where plaintiff's case is defective for want of equity,[50] and it has been held that error cannot be predicated on either the giving or refusal of a demurrer to the evidence in an equity case.[50.5]

Where, however, the verdict in plaintiff's favor is not supported by competent evidence, the overruling of defendant's demurrer to the evidence is prejudicial error.[51]

Error in sustaining a demurrer to the evidence is not ground for reversal where such error was not prejudicial,[52] as where the facts are found for defendant,[53] or where there was no evidence reasonably tending to support plaintiff's case.[54] A refusal to allow an amendment to the grounds of demurrer to the evidence by adding another ground was not prejudicial to defendant, where it had a right to, and did, argue in its petition for writ of error the point proposed to be made and relied on by the amendment.[55] Where, however, plaintiff's evidence makes a prima facie case, it is reversible error to sustain a demurrer thereto.[56]

§ 1758. Direction of Verdict

In the absence of prejudice to the complaining party, error in directing or failing to direct a verdict is harmless; but where prejudice resulted, the error is ground for reversal.

Where prejudice to the complaining party could not have resulted from error in disposing of a motion for directed verdict,[57] as where the action of

Motion to exclude all evidence

Failure to direct as to punitive damages

Where defendant's motion for directed verdict was based on ground that plaintiff had no interest in lost policy certificate sued on, alleged error in not directing a verdict as to punitive damages was not ground for reversal.

Hearing in chambers

Although ordinarily a motion for directed verdict cannot be heard in chambers, such hearing of motion would be merely a nonprejudicial irregularity and not jurisdictional.

Cal.—Gibson v. Southern Pac. Co., 290 P.2d 347, 137 C.A.2d 337.

Mere ruling not error

(1) Action of court in sustaining defendant's motion for peremptory instruction was not reversible error, since mere sustaining of motion did not injure plaintiff, substantial error, if any, being in instructing jury to find for defendant.

Smith v. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 117 N.E. 534, 67 Ind. App. 397.

(2) The mere overruling of a motion for a directed verdict is not reversible error, the available error, if the others[57.5] or to plaintiff,[57.10] the error is not ground for reversal. With respect to error in directing a verdict it has accordingly been held that the error is harmless where the question involved in the suit is solely one of law on which the court rules correctly;[58] where the only error was that any, being in refusing to give such an instruction.

Order of ruling on motions

Where evidence showed plaintiff to be entitled to commissions as a matter of law that trial court granted plaintiff's motion for directed verdict before ruling on defendant's motion for directed verdict, although irregular, was not prejudicial to defendant.

N.Y.—Ralph Klonick Corp. v. Security Trust Co. of Rochester, 8 N.Y.S.2d 777, 255 App.Div. 942.

Refusal of insufficient motion

Refusal of purported motion for an instructed verdict containing no grounds therefor was not reversible.

Tex.—Johnson Aircrafts v. Wilborn, Civ.App., 190 S.W.2d 426, refused for want of merit.

Striking from files of a motion for a directed verdict which was filed four days after verdict of jury and was based on evidence was harmless where plaintiff's right to recover was at most an issue for jury.

Mo.—Evans v. York, App., 216 S.W. 2d 124.

Test

Reversible error in refusal to give peremptory instructions in defendant's favor appears only when there is a complete absence of probative facts to support the conclusion reached.

N.C.—Garvey v. Atlantic-Greyhound Corp., 45 S.E.2d 58, 228 N.C. 166.

Waiver of jury

Where, at the close of all the testimony, counsel for both sides stipulated to waive the jury and submit the case to the court, the fact that no verdict was in fact directed or returned, and no findings of fact made by the court is a question of procedure only and not grounds for new trial.

N.D.—Embden State Bank v. Boyle, 196 N.W. 820, 50 N.D. 573.

Where plaintiff failed to give requisite instructions

Permitting plaintiff's action to go to the jury, when he had not submitted instructions giving his theory of liability, is not prejudicial error where the court gave defendant's instructions stating on what grounds recovery could be had.

Mo.—Dorman v. East St. Louis Ry. Co., 75 S.W.2d 854, 335 Mo. 1082.

Writing amount of verdict

Telling jury, on peremptory instruction, they could write down amount of verdict, if unable to remember it, was not prejudicial.

N.C.—Lightner v. Knights of King Solomon, 155 S.E. 158, 199 N.C. 525.

Withdrawal of motion

Permitting one of defendants to withdraw his motion for a directed verdict after court had indicated its ruling thereon was not reversible error where plaintiff thereafter dismissed his action against such defendant.

Wash.—Wylie v. Stewart, 84 P.2d 1004, 197 Wash. 215.

Statutory duty

In consolidated actions against railroad company and against city by automobile passenger injured because of defect in grade crossing, direction of verdict for city was not prejudicial to the railroad company which had a statutory duty to maintain the crossings as concerned the rights of the public.

Miss.—Mississippi Cent. R. Co. v. Alexander, 152 So. 653, 169 Miss. 620.

Time of motion

In guest passenger's action against her driver and driver of oncoming vehicle with which her driver collided while endeavoring to make left turn off highway, it was within discretion of trial court to permit plaintiff's driver to wait until after argument before moving for directed verdict; and such a procedure could not have been prejudicial to other defendant, who was allowed to re-argue the case and clear up any confusion which might have resulted from belated motion.

Cal.—Quiring v. Zamboni, 307 P.2d 650, 148 C.A.2d 890.

57.10 Ky.—Kentucky Bell Corp. v. Commonwealth, 172 S.W.2d 661, 295 Ky. 21.

Reserving decision on motion

In automobile collision case, reservation of decision on plaintiff's motion for directed verdict in defendant's counter action on ground that defendant was negligent as matter of law was not ground for reversal, where plaintiff did not advise court that reservation prejudiced plaintiff's case by necessitating submission on negligence of both parties, or suggest that in submitting plaintiff's case court declare defendant negligent as matter of law.

Effect of objection

Under statute providing that motion for directed verdict must be denied if adverse party objects, direction of verdict over objection is not prejudicial where judgment for moving party must be entered.

Failure to state reasons

(1) Error in failing to state reasons for directing verdict has been held harmless.

64 C.J. p 505 note 60.

(2) Accordingly, where the facts were stipulated between the parties, and both requested a directed verdict, the failure of the court, in directing a verdict for plaintiff, to state his reason therefor, was not prejudicial error.

Mich.—Winget v. Grand Trunk Western Ry. Co., 177 N.W. 273, 210 Mich. 100, certiorari denied Grand Trunk Western Ry. Co. v. Winget, 41 S.Ct. 6, 254 U.S. 629, 65 L.Ed. 447.

the form of the prayer for the directed verdict was imperfect;[59] where the jury finds a verdict for appellant;[60] or where a motion for a new trial was sustained.[61]

Likewise, it has been held that error in directing a verdict is not ground for reversal where no verdict other than that found could have lawfully been returned;[62] where the party against whom the verdict was directed could not succeed in any event,[63] or failed to make any defense;[64] where the only meritorious defense of defendant against whom the verdict was directed was not proved;[65] where

Where the evidence was sufficient to take the question of defendant's wanton negligence to the jury, error in directing a verdict for defendant on a wanton negligence count is not rendered harmless by the jury's finding for plaintiff on a simple negligence count.

Direction against counterclaim
(1) Directing of verdict against defendant on counterclaim was not prejudicial, where a verdict for plaintiff involved a finding which would defeat counterclaim.
Ky.—Louisville Grinding & Machine Co. v. Southern Oil & Tar Co., 18 S.W.2d 877, 230 Ky. 39.

(2) Where sellers brought action, buyers filed counterclaim, and at conclusion of opening statement trial court directed verdict on counterclaim for sellers, such directing of verdict was harmless error because motion for directed verdict would have been properly allowed at conclusion of testimony.

64. Ga.—Bennett v. Gilmer, 84 S.E. 151, 15 Ga.App. 650.

Confession and avoidance
Where defendant by plea of confession and avoidance admitted prima facie case for plaintiff, but failed to allege any valid defense by way of avoidance, any error in failing to allow defendant to support allegations of plea by evidence and in directing a verdict against him was harmless.
Ga.—Gill v. Skinner, 45 S.E.2d 818, 76 Ga.App. 315.

65. U.S.—Breakwater Co. v. Donovan, Ohio, 218 F. 340, 134 C.C.A. 148.

the court would have set aside a verdict for the party against whom it was directed,[66] or a verdict for a less sum than that specified by the court in directing a verdict;[67] or where the right of the party in whose favor verdict is directed to judgment is established either by record evidence or admitted facts so as not to be dependent upon the credibility of oral testimony.[68]

Moreover, error in directing a verdict has been held harmless where the complaint does not state a cause of action;[69] where the evidence would have justified the court in discharging the jury and rendering judgment in favor of the party for whom the verdict was directed;[70] where, pending proceedings for review, a final judgment has been rendered in another proceeding between the same parties which conclusively determines the question at issue in favor of the party for whom the verdict was directed;[71] where the amount erroneously directed by the verdict was corrected by a remittitur and judgment entered for the proper amount;[72] where the directed verdict was for an amount less than the amount defendant admittedly owed plaintiff;[73] or where the court withdraws its direction to find a verdict and the question is left to the jury.[74]

Also, the direction of a verdict on an untenable ground will not be ground for reversal where the evidence is insufficient to sustain a recovery,[75] or where no cause of action was stated against the party in whose favor the verdict was directed.[76] Any error in giving affirmative instructions for defendant as to one count is harmless where plaintiff could have proved the same facts under other counts.[77] Where a demurrer to the evidence would have been sustained, an instruction to find for defendant after the jury indicated an intention to find for plaintiff is not reversible error.[78]

Unwarranted direction. On the other hand, an unwarranted direction of the verdict is prejudicial error.[79] Accordingly, the direction of a verdict is prejudicial error where there was a question of fact for the jury;[79.5] where there was a conflict in the evidence;[80] where reasonable minds might reach different conclusions, although the evidence is uncontradicted;[81] where a verdict for plaintiff could lawfully have been rendered on the evidence;[82] where questions of fact were erroneously eliminated by court's sustaining of objections to admissible evidence;[83] or where a statute prohibits the practice.[84] which the motion was directed;[86.5] where the record shows that the final judgment is right;[87] where the court withdrew from the jury's consideration the issue which was the basis of the motion;[88] where the issue as to which the direction was refused was immaterial,[89] or improperly added by amendment;[89.5] or where the verdict rested or could rest on a count in the complaint, other than that for which a directed verdict was requested.[90]

Error in refusing to direct a verdict has also been held harmless where the court required the jury to find in any event for the party, whose motion for directed verdict was refused,[91] or sustained that party's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict;[91.5] where no judgment was rendered against the party whose motion was refused;[92] where the judgment shows on its face that no testimony was introduced and no issue tried and that in consequence the judgment formed no bar to another action;[93] where the defects in plaintiff's case are afterward supplied by evidence offered by defendant;[94] where the moving party has been granted a new trial;[95] or where on a motion for a new trial the court eliminated a counterclaim in respect of which it had refused to direct a verdict for plaintiff by reducing the verdict for defendant by the amount of the counterclaim.[96]

Furthermore, it has been held that the action of the trial court in improperly refusing peremptorily to instruct for a defendant on the first trial of a cause is not subject to review on a second appeal from a judgment rendered on a second trial of such cause if the trial court repaired its error on the first trial by awarding a new trial.[97] Any error in

Failure to direct verdict as to specific issue

In action for personal injuries, where the court directed a verdict of not guilty, on the ground that the rights of the parties were governed by Workmen's Compensation Act, so that plaintiff, an employee, could not maintain the action, defendant not being his employer, defendant was not prejudiced by failure to direct such verdict on the further ground that plaintiff's negligence, as a matter of law, contributed to his injury.

overruling a motion for a directed verdict at the close of plaintiff's evidence is immaterial, if a similar motion at the close of all the evidence was properly overruled.[98] In one state it has been held that the reviewing court will under no circumstances reverse because of a refusal of the trial court to direct a verdict.[99]

On the other hand, it is prejudicial error to refuse to instruct the jury to find for plaintiff on the question of defendant's liability where his liability is unquestioned;[1] and, likewise, it may be reversible error to refuse to direct a verdict for defendant where the evidence is insufficient to sustain a judgment for plaintiff,[2] or to refuse a directed verdict on a particular count of the complaint which is insufficient on its face.[2.5] Where demurrers to immaterial pleas were overruled when they should have been sustained and plaintiff joined issue on such pleas, thereby rendering them material, and defendant established them by the evidence, defendant was entitled to the general charge, although inconsistent with the rulings on demurrer, and the refusal of the court to give it cannot be said to be harmless error.[3]

14. Submission or Withdrawal of Issues, Questions, or Special Interrogatories

§ 1759. Submission of Issues of Fact

Whether the improper submission of an issue of fact to the jury constitutes reversible error depends on whether prejudice results to the complaining party.

As a general rule, whether the submission of an issue not pleaded or proved will constitute reversible error will depend on the harm that is done by it,[3.50] and it is reversible error where prejudice results to the complaining party,[4] as where the verdict could not have been reached except by a considera-

Unnecessary issues resulting in undue prejudice

Ordinarily, submitting of issues which are merely evidentiary or unnecessary does not constitute reversible error, but whenever a party's right to a clear-cut submission of his theories of recovery or defense is unduly prejudiced by use of excessive and unnecessary issues, a reversal of judgment must be ordered.

and a verdict is returned for appellee,[9] where the evidence conclusively negatives the existence of the facts submitted,[10] or where it cannot be said that the jury was not influenced by the improper submission of the issues, as where it is impossible for the court to say whether or not the jury took into consideration, or based its verdict on, the issue improperly submitted.[11]

Nevertheless, where it appears that the objecting party was not injured, errors in submitting issues do not constitute ground for reversal.[12] This principle

One proper issue

Where on several defenses a general verdict is found for defendant without showing on which issue based, and there is no error in the submission of at least one of the issues, a finding upon which in favor of the prevailing party would justify a general judgment, error in the submission of other issues will be disregarded.

Ohio.—Niemes v. Niemes, 119 N.E. 503, 97 Ohio St. 145—State v. Hills, 113 N.E. 1045, 94 Ohio St. 171, L.R.A.1917B 684.

Repetition

The fact that an issue submitted to the jury was a mere repetition of another issue is harmless error.

Tex.—Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co. v. Wells, Civ.App., 60 S.W.2d 485.

Submission under improper statute

In an action by a conductor of a railroad work train against the railroad for injuries, submission of the case under the Federal Employers' Liability Act was not prejudicial to defendant; assumption of risk not being involved and rule of comparative negligence, as established by Code Suppl.(1913) § 2071, being same as under the federal act.

Iowa.—Eley v. Chicago Great West-has been applied to the submission of issues not raised either by the evidence[13] or the pleadings;[14] where the jury made no finding on, or excluded from consideration, the issue improperly submitted;[15] where the record showed that the jury did not consider the issue;[16] where the finding on the issue improperly submitted could not affect the verdict;[17] where the issue submitted was immaterial to a decision;[18] or where the question or issue was rendered immaterial by the verdict or the finding of the jury on issues properly submitted,[19] or by ern R. Co., 166 N.W. 739, 186 Iowa 312.

Where there is substantial evidence tending to prove an essential fact pleaded, the supreme court will not disturb the action of the trial court in submitting such issuable fact to the jury upon proper instructions.

Mo.—Orblitt v. Bergfeld, 191 S.W. 998.

Will examine record

The supreme court, in determining whether an error in submitting issues justifies a new trial, will look at the whole record and read the verdict with reference to the trial.

§ 1760. Submission of Questions of Law

Although the submission of an issue of law to the jury is erroneous, it is not ground for reversal unless it is prejudicial to the complaining party.

In the absence of prejudice resulting to appellant, the erroneous submission of questions of law to the jury does not constitute ground for reversal,[29]

Adopting verdict as opinion of court

Although the construction of an act establishing boundaries of school districts ought not to be submitted to the jury, such submission is not fatal where, after verdict, the court overruled a motion for new trial thus adopting the verdict of the jury as the opinion of the court.

Ky.—Board of Education of Somerset Public Schools v. Graded Com-and if the court may or does ignore the answer of the jury to a question of law which has been submitted, the error in submitting the question is immaterial.[29.5]

Error in submitting a question of law to the jury is harmless where the jury decides the question correctly,[30] as for instance where the jury correctly construes a written instrument,[31] decree,[32] advertisement of an administrator's sale,[33] or statute,[34] or correctly decides the question of the sufficiency of certificates of acknowledgment,[35] the materiality of the alteration of a written instrument,[36] the existence of probable cause in a suit for malicious prosecution,[37] whether a railroad regulation is reasonable,[38] whether an attorney rendered legal services to a person,[38.5] the existence of a partnership[39] or agency,[40] or the sufficiency of proof offered to show the loss of an instrument.[41]

Error in submitting a question of law is also harmless where it gives appellant an additional chance for a favorable verdict;[42] where the court in denying a motion for new trial virtually held as

Case disposed of as equitable

Plaintiff cannot complain of court's impaneling jury to try an apparent legal issue, where the case was finally disposed of as an equitable issue.

matter of law that appellee was entitled to recover;[43] where the questions of law so submitted were not in controversy on the trial;[44] where the verdict of the jury is merely advisory;[45] or where judgment should have been rendered by the court of a verdict directed against the complaining party.[46] It has also been held that an instruction which appears to submit to the jury as a question of fact matter appertaining to a contract is not erroneous where the terms of the contract were conceded.[47]

On the other hand, error in submitting a question of law to the jury may be ground for reversal,[47.5] as where the jury does not decide the question correctly,[48] and error in submitting the construction of a written instrument to the jury is ground for reversal where it cannot be determined how the jury construed the instrument.[49] Furthermore, where, in addition to the submission of a question of law to the jury, the case is submitted on an erroneous theory, the causes which produced the verdict must be largely a matter of conjecture, and the judgment should be reversed.[50]

§ 1761. Failure or Refusal to Submit Issue, or Withdrawal of Issue

Error on the part of the trial court in failing to submit material issues to the jury, or in withdrawing material issues which have been submitted, is ground for reversal only if prejudice results.

If the trial court fails or refuses to submit material issues to the jury, or withdraws material issues which have been submitted, it is ground for reversal if prejudice results to the complaining party;[51] but it is very generally held that failure

Request not required

(1) Where trial court erroneously withdrew from jury question whether defendant was negligent, fact that defendant requested no such issue was immaterial and new trial would be ordered on appeal.

Tex.—Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Kengla, Civ.App., 266 S.W.2d 548, error refused no reversible error.

(2) A trial court has duty to instruct jury on every issue presented by pleadings and evidence, whether or not requested to do so, and failure to do so constitutes prejudicial error.

Neb.—Maska v. Stoll, 81 N.W.2d 571, 163 Neb. 857.

Right to have issues presented

A litigant is entitled to have all issues, pleaded and raised by the evidence, affirmatively presented to jury, with his right to their submission determined before verdict and not afterwards.

Tex.—State v. Schlick, 179 S.W.2d 246, 142 Tex. 410.

Error not cured

Where issue is raised and its submission requested, error in refusing to submit it is not cured or rendered harmless by findings of jury on other issues that were submitted which have effect of negativing favorable answer to requested issue.

Tex.—Byerley v. Bauer, Civ.App., 99 S.W.2d 641, error dismissed.

Opportunity for knowing facts

In close cases it is reversible error to charge on only portion of code provision relating to witnesses' means and opportunity for knowing facts to which they testified and to fail to charge all of it.

abandoned,[68] or was not urged separately;[69] or where the jury were instructed that their decision must be based on admissions in the pleadings, stipulations, or testimony of witnesses, and proper inferences therefrom.[70] Failure expressly to withdraw an issue is also not a reversible error where the instructions limited the right to recover to other issues;[71] but it cannot be said that improper issues were withdrawn where the instructions do not refer to the paragraph tendering such issues.[72] If, however, a failure to withdraw the issue was prejudicial, as where it was unsupported by the evidence, the error is ground for reversal.[73]

§ 1762. Submission or Refusal to Submit Special Interrogatories

a. Submission of special interrogatories or special issues

b. Refusal to submit special interrogatories or special issues

c. Submission or refusal to submit questions in equity cases

a. Submission of Special Interrogatories or Special Issues

Error on the part of the trial court in submitting special interrogatories or special issues to the jury will not constitute ground for reversal unless prejudice results to the party complaining.

Where there is error in the submission of special interrogatories or special issues to the jury, such error is not a ground for reversal if it is not prejudicial to the complaining party;[74] but if the error was clearly prejudicial it may constitute ground for

Influence of unsupported issue on jury

Failure to withdraw from jury a count which is not supported by competent evidence, if, on a fair review of all evidence, it reasonably appears that jury would be influenced by considerations arising from allegations of the count which were detrimental to defendant, because such allegations were unsupported by any competent evidence, may result in prejudicial error.

64 C.J. p 1118 notes 7, 8.

Burden of proving unavoidable accident

Error in placing the burden of proving unavoidable accident on defendants by an issue submitted to the jury in a death action was harmless to defendants, where the evidence did not raise such issue.

Tex.—Texas Public Service Co. v. Laughead, Civ.App., 73 S.W.2d 925.

Framing discretionary

Framing of special issues is addressed largely to the discretion of the trial court and not subject to review except for prejudicial abuse.

Tex.—Luling Oil & Gas Co. v. Edwards, Civ.App., 32 S.W.2d 921.

Implied comment or instruction

Although special issue submitted to jury may constitute an implied comment or instruction, because of assumption or apparent assumption of fact involved in terms in which it propounds a question, such special issue does not always entail a reversal, since under circumstances of particular case force of comment may be so weak that it either is no comment at all or may be said to be harmless.

Tex.—Mason v. Yellow Cab & Baggage Co., 269 S.W.2d 329, 153 Tex. 344.

Improper interrogatories disregarded

Action of trial court in permitting interrogatories, even if improper, to go to jury would not be reversible error because trial court, in ruling on motion to set aside verdict, is presumed to have disregarded any answers of jury to improper interrogatories.

Ind.—Stull v. Davidson, 127 N.E.2d 130, 125 Ind.App. 565.

Reference to pleading

Error in stating special issue so as to refer the jury to the pleadings for information may or may not be material, depending on whether such reference is reasonably calculated to prejudice a party's rights, under the particular facts.

Tex.—Traders & General Ins. Co. v. Weatherford, Civ.App., 124 S.W.2d 423, error dismissed, judgment correct.

Refusal to strike

(1) The court, in determining whether judgment should be rendered on the general verdict or in answers to interrogatories, should consider only facts elicited by proper interrogatories, so that refusal to strike interrogatories is not reversible error.

Ind.—Ft. Wayne & N. I. Traction Co. v. Kumb, 116 N.E. 309, 64 Ind.App. 529.

(2) If special questions to jury were as to matters that were not at issue in the case, it was not prejudicial error for the trial court to refuse to strike the answers.

Kan.—Neiswender v. Board of Com'rs of Shawnee County, 113 P.2d 115, 153 Kan. 634, opinion supplemented on other grounds 120 P.2d 218, 154 Kan. 588.

Special issue informing jury of judgment

It does not constitute reversible error for trial court to submit special issues to be answered, conditioned on how other issues were answered, provided such condition does not have effect of apprising jury of effect their answers will have on judgment to be rendered by court.

Tex.—Kadane v. Clark, Civ.App., 134 S.W.2d 448, reversed on other grounds 143 S.W.2d 197, 135 Tex. 496.

Submitting questions and directing answers

In personal injury action, fact that court submitted two special questions to jury and then directed jury to answer the questions in the affirmative was not prejudicial error, where there was no dispute with respect to the matters submitted.

Mich.—Vitaioli v. Berklund, 295 N.W. 557, 296 Mich. 56.

Time of consideration

Where interrogatories are submitted and answered, it is not reversible error to refuse a requested instruction that the jury may consider and answer them either before or after agreement on the general verdict.

Ind.—S. W. Little Coal Co. v. O'Brien, 113 N.E. 465, 63 Ind.App. 504, rehearing denied 114 N.E. 96, 63 Ind.App. 504.

Burden of proof

(1) As a general rule, erroneous placing of burden of proof in special interrogatories or special issues is reversible error.

Tex.—Pride of Dallas Taxicab Co. v. Lawrence, Civ.App., 277 S.W.2d 169, error refused no reversible error—City of River Oaks v. Moore, Civ.App., 272 S.W.2d 389, error refused no reversible error—Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co. v. Tucker, Civ. App., 207 S.W.2d 937—Citizens Hotel Co. v. Wis.—Sloan v. Brown County State Bank, 182 N.W. 363, 174 Wis. 36.

(2) However, where special issue erroneously places burden of proof, error may be harmless in view of facts shown conclusively by record.

Tex.—Republic Underwriters v. Meyer, Civ.App., 127 S.W.2d 538, reversed on other grounds Shoemaker v. Meyer, 152 S.W.2d 741, 137 Tex. 97.

(3) Prior to effective date of rules of civil procedure, submission of special issue which failed to indicate burden of proof would constitute prejudicial error, notwithstanding evidence supporting judgment was overwhelming.

Two controverted issues submitted

Prior to effective date of rules of civil procedure, and under statute repealed by rules of civil procedure, it was reversible error to submit two controverted issues together in one special issue.

Interrogatory pertaining to evidentiary fact

If special interrogatory pertained to evidentiary fact, as distinguished from ultimate fact, it would have no effect on case since, if question was proper, answer would control general verdict, and, if improper, answer could not control general verdict even if inconsistent therewith, and court would disregard such answer and enter judgment on verdict.

negative,[82] or favorably to the complaining party;[83] where the trial court could properly have given peremptory instructions on the issue in favor of the party for whom the jury found;[84] where the complaining party introduced no evidence on the issues submitted;[85] where the withholding of the issue would not have affected the verdict;[86] or where the interrogatory improperly submitted was not answered.[87] Where a general verdict is rendered, it has been held that error of the court in contravening statutory prohibitions against requiring answers to special issues as to whether a general verdict was found is not prejudicial.[88]

On the other hand, it may constitute reversible error to submit a special issue or interrogatory which was without any evidence in support of it,[88.5] or which constitutes a comment on the evidence,[88.10] or, if on the question of damages, which does not correctly state the proper measure by which to ascertain the damages.[88.15]

Issue unsupported by evidence

Litigant, who has ample opportunity to attack special finding of jury which is not supported by evidence, may not contend that his rights have been prejudiced by mere submission of issues to jury, unless questions are so inflammatory or suggestive that mere submission would constitute prejudicial error.

b. Refusal to Submit Special Interrogatories or Special Issues

Error in the refusal to submit special interrogatories or special issues to the jury will constitute ground for reversal only if prejudice results to the complaining party.

Refusal to submit special interrogatories in a proper case resulting in prejudice to the party requesting their submission is reversible error,[89] as where by reason thereof the jury failed to understand the case properly and rendered an ambiguous, if not inconsistent, verdict.[90] It has also been held titled to peremptory instructions;[99] where the verdict on the issues submitted amply supports the judgment;[1] where no other general verdict could have been rendered;[2] where the answers to the interrogatories must necessarily have been adverse to appellant[3] or could not have changed the result;[4] where an affirmative answer to the proposed special interrogatory propounded by defendant would not have been inconsistent with the general verdict for plaintiff;[5] where no matter what the answer to the interrogatories might have been they would be entirely consistent with the general verdict returned by the jury;[6] where, if submitted, the jury would not have been required by the terms of the interrogatories to answer them;[7] or where the issues to which the interrogatories related were so simple that analysis was not necessary to require proper consideration thereof.[8]

c. Submission or Refusal to Submit Questions in Equity Cases

Ordinarily, errors in the submission of, or refusal to submit, special interrogatories, special issues, or questions to the jury in actions of an equitable nature are not grounds for reversal.

In equity cases, where the verdict is only advisory, errors in submitting or refusing to submit, issues or questions to the jury will not ordinarily be grounds for reversal,[9] particularly where it appears that the jury reached a correct conclusion,[10] where the finding was favorable to appellants,[11] or where the court disregarded the verdict and made independent findings.[12]

Imperfections in form

Judgment in an equity case will not be reversed for slight imperfections in the form of interrogatories to the jury.

Ariz.—Pawley v. First Nat. Bank, 256 P. 507, 32 Ariz. 135.

No notice of motion

Since the chancellor was not bound by the jury's finding, an irregularity in submitting the issue to the jury on the chancellor's own motion without notice to the parties was harmless.

a. Error in Instructions Given

§ 1763(1). Prejudicial Effect in General

a. Harmless error
b. Prejudicial error
c. Actions involving motor vehicles

a. Harmless Error

The giving of an erroneous instruction will not ordinarily constitute a ground for reversal where the complaining party has not been prejudiced.

As a general rule, the giving of an erroneous instruction will not constitute a ground for reversal where the complaining party has not been injured thereby.[13] A judgment will not be reversed for er-

"Errors in instructions which are not prejudicial to substantial rights will be ignored on appeal. Such errors are grounds for reversal only when so contrary to the law and evidence or otherwise so defective as to be calculated to mislead the jury and result in an unjust verdict."

Ky.—Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Carroll's Adm'r, 61 S.W.2d 41, 44, 249 Ky. 703.

Prejudice to complaining party essential

It is only where the errors complained of in ruling on evidence and instructions, or in matters of pleading or procedure, cause miscarriage of justice, or constitute substantial violation of constitutional or statutory right, that the case will be reversed.

Okl.—Schaff v. Coyle, 249 P. 947, 121 Okl. 228.

Whether errors in instructions were prejudicial must depend on closeness of case on its facts, nature of erroneous instructions and of other instructions given, and other factors.

R.I.—Proctor v. Bak, 65 A.2d 453, 75 R.I. 232.

Tex.—Texas Emp. Ins. Ass'n v. Brown, Civ.App., 226 S.W.2d 233, error refused no reversible error.

Construction of instruction

(1) Test in determining whether instruction is reversibly erroneous is not what meaning ingenuity of counsel can, at leisure, attribute to instruction, but how and in what sense, under evidence before them and circumstances of trial, ordinary men acting as jurors will understand instructions.

Ill.—Ingram v. Tucker, 111 N.E.2d 847, 350 Ill.App. 100.

(2) Real test of meaning and effect of an instruction for purpose of review by reviewing court is idea which language objected to is fairly calculated to convey to minds of jurors drawn from ordinary walks of life, and fact that on a minute, technical or hypercritical analysis some other interpretation can be placed thereon, may be disregarded.

Iowa.—Hackman v. Beckwith, 64 N. W.2d 275, 245 Iowa 791.

(3) Mere fact that meticulous analysis of instructions given may disclose some technical error does not result in prejudicial error, unless it appears that jury was or could have been misled thereby.

Cal.—Popejoy v. Hannon, 231 P.2d 484, 37 C.2d 159.

Coe v. Kings County Truck Line, 293 P.2d 462, 139 C.A.2d 372—Duff v. Schaefer Ambulance Service, 281

ror in the giving of instructions where the instructions are erroneous only as to other parties,[13.5] or when the erroneous instruction is not only not prejudicial but is in fact favorable to the complaining party.[14]

The rule that a judgment will not be reversed for harmless error in the giving of instructions has been applied in a great variety of actions including actions for alienation of affections,[14.1] assault,[14.2] con-

P.2d 91, 132 C.A.2d 655—Risley v. Lenwell, 277 P.2d 897, 129 C.A.2d 608.

(4) Meaning of an instruction, not phraseology, is important consideration, and claim of prejudice will not be sustained if meaning of instruction is reasonably clear.

Neb.—Fridley v. Brush, 73 N.W.2d 376, 161 Neb. 318—Scarborough v. Aeroservice, Inc., 53 N.W.2d 902, 155 Neb. 749, 30 A.L.R.2d 1159—Brown v. Hyslop, 45 N.W.2d 743, 153 Neb. 669.

(5) Supreme court, on determining on appeal whether trial court erred in giving certain instruction and in refusing to give similar requested instruction, was not concerned with niceties of English language, but only with whether jury properly understood terminology used by trial court.

Iowa.—In re Smith's Will, 60 N.W.2d 866, 245 Iowa 38.

Probability of prejudice

In passing on alleged errors in instructions, an appellate court should keep in mind question whether it is reasonably probable that instructions as given misled jury to prejudice of complaining party.

Iowa.—Jaeger v. Hackert, 41 N.W. 2d 42, 241 Iowa 379.

Okl.—Rosier v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 168 P.2d 302, 197 Okl. 35.

Maxim "de minimis non curat lex" that law is not concerned with trifles has no application to charge of court to jury.

Ohio.—Readnour v. Cincinnati St. Ry. Co., App., 93 N.E.2d 412, affirmed 93 N.E.2d 587, 154 Ohio St. 69.

Size of verdict, although not so excessive as to warrant disturbing on appeal, would serve as an additional incentive for supreme court of appeals to examine instructions with minute care to ascertain whether they were couched in language which may have been calculated to mislead jury or to give them some misconception of merits of case.

Only in case which is free of all doubt on point can it be said that an instruction which is erroneous is without prejudicial effect.

Ky.—Southeastern Greyhound Lines v. Buckles, 183 S.W.2d 965, 298 Ky. 681.

Lack of prejudice must appear

If it does not appear from record that incorrect instruction to jury did not affect result of trial of case unfavorably to party affected by it, giving of instruction must be considered to have been prejudicial error.

Neb.—Raile v. Toews, 84 N.W.2d 199, 165 Neb. 184—Van Wye v. Wagner, 79 N.W.2d 281, 163 Neb. 205.

Cal.—Cedzo v. Bergen, 128 P.2d 683, 53 C.A.2d 667.

4 C.J. p 1031 note 32.

In an action for personal injuries, instructions that if the injuries had been fully paid for in settlement to find for defendant, and that the plea of not guilty denied only breach of duty or wrongful action alleged and nothing more, could have misled the jury to the injury of defendant and require granting a new trial.

Fla.—Orange Belt Auto Line v. Harford, 109 So. 201, 91 Fla. 1011.

Instruction on form of verdict

In an action against a bus driver and his employer in which the liability of the employer depended solely on the doctrine of respondeat superior, submission to the jury of a form of verdict authorizing finding for the driver but against the employer is error, as misleading and prejudicial where the jury returned such verdict.

Mo.—Ruehling v. Pickwick-Greyhound Lines, 85 S.W.2d 602, 337 Mo. 196.

Instruction permitting improper inference

Where, under governing Oregon law, the speed of an automobile in excess of the statutory "indicated speed" of forty five miles per hour was unlawful only if the driver was violating the basic statutory rule respecting reasonable speed, instruction that it was lawful to drive at a speed not exceeding forty five miles is harmfully misleading as permitting inference that a higher speed would necessarily be unlawful.

c. Actions Involving Motor Vehicles

The rule that a judgment will not be reversed because of erroneous instructions, in the absence of prejudice to the complaining party, has been applied in actions involving motor vehicles.

The judgment in an action for injuries resulting from the operation of a motor vehicle will not be reversed for error in the giving of instructions where such error did not prejudice the complaining party.[19.57] This rule has been applied in cases § 1763(2). —— Instructions Informal, Inaccurate, Incomplete, Uncertain, Etc.

a. In general
b. Using, or referring jury to, pleadings

a. In General

Unless there is prejudice to the complaining party, informal, inaccurate, incomplete, argumentative, or ambiguous instructions will not necessitate reversal.

The giving of an instruction which is informal, inaccurate, incomplete, misleading, or lacking in clearness or certainty will not constitute a ground for reversal where there is no prejudice to the complaining party.[20] In the absence of prejudice, the

Allegedly erroneous use of particular terms

(1) "Against," in a charge that the jury could in no event find a verdict against defendant generally, where the word "against," if used, was a lapse.
Ga.—Dawson Paper Shell Pecan Co. v. Montezuma Fertilizer Co., 90 S.E. 984, 19 Ga.App. 42.

(2) "Approximate cause" of accident, such expression being practically synonymous with "proximate cause" of accident.
Cal.—Carter v. J. W. Silver Trucking Co., App., 36 P.2d 837, reversed on other grounds 47 P.2d 733, 4 C.2d 198.

(3) "Constantly alert," in an instruction requiring a track laborer to be "constantly alert," where the laborer knew the dangers of the switch-yard where the injury occurred.
Wis.—London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. Great Northern R. Co., 221 N.W. 762, 197 Wis. 241.

(4) "Direct," in a malpractice instruction that the law was for the dentist unless the patient's injuries were the direct or proximate result of the dentist's negligence.
Ky.—Tanner v. Sanders, 56 S.W.2d 718, 247 Ky. 90.

(5) "Evidence of negligence," in an instruction that the accident itself was "evidence of negligence."
N.J.—Hagens v. West Englewood Lumber Co., 138 A. 519, 5 N.J.Misc. 825.

(6) "Fraud," in an instruction relating to additional insurance claimed to have avoided a fire policy.
Minn.—Basa v. Pierz Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 227 N.W. 39, 172 Minn. 305, 68 A.L.R. 359.

(7) "High degree of care," in an instruction, in a passenger's action for injuries from defendant's handling of explosives at a station where reasonable care was necessarily a high degree of care, that defendant was required to exercise a "high degree of care."
N.J.—Gallatty v. Central R. of New Jersey, 92 A. 279, 86 N.J.Law 416.

(8) "Materially contributed to the accident," in an instruction that contributory negligence to preclude recovery must have "materially contributed to the accident."
Wash.—Hansen v. Sandvik, 222 P. 205, 128 Wash. 60.

(9) "Offered," in an instruction relative to the weighing of evidence offered.
Ohio.—Travelers' Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn. v. Gath, 160 N.E. 710, 118 Ohio St. 257.
Cleveland Ry. Co. v. Duralia, 165 N.E. 358, 30 Ohio App. 389.

(10) "Other," qualifying the word "damages" in an instruction without an object to operate upon, therefore being without meaning.
Ariz.—Timmons v. McKinzie, 189 P. 627, 21 Ariz. 433.

(11) "Precaution," in instructions as to an engineer's duty toward a trespasser on the track.
Ky.—McKinney's Adm'x v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co., 45 S.W. 2d 1031, 242 Ky. 167.

(12) "Prima facie," where the term could not have affected the verdict.
Ill.—Sweney v. Northwestern Mut. Ins. Co., 251 Ill.App. 1.

(13) "Promptly," in an instruction that to avoid a contract on the ground of infancy, the infant must disaffirm it "promptly" within a reasonable time after reaching his majority.
Minn.—Kelly v. Furlong, 261 N.W. 460, 194 Minn. 465.

(14) "Rapidly," in an instruction on negligently causing an elevator "rapidly" to descend.
Iowa.—Dean v. Koolish, 234 N.W. 179, 212 Iowa 238.

(15) "Satisfactory," in an instruction requiring the preponderance of the evidence to be "more satisfactory" to the jury than contrary evidence.
Ohio.—Travelers' Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn. v. Gath, 160 N.E. 710, 118 Ohio St. 257.

(16) "Set aside for vehicular traffic," in an instruction to find for defendants if an ordinarily prudent person would not have attempted to cross the part of the roadway so set aside.
Or.—Houston v. Maunula, 255 P. 477, 121 Or. 552.

(17) "Unnecessarily," in an instruction on conspiring unnecessarily to ruin plaintiff's business.
Wash.—Eyak River Packing Co. v. Huglen, 255 P. 123, 143 Wash. 229, affirmed 257 P. 638, 143 Wash. 229.

(18) "Utter," in expressions "utter disregard of consequences," and "utter reckless or absolute disregard of safety of others," in an instruction on gross negligence.
Or.—Storla v. Spokane, Portland & Seattle Transp. Co., 297 P. 367, 136 Or. 315, rehearing denied 298 P. 1065, 136 Or. 315.

(19) "Various occasions," in instruction relating to "family purpose doctrine," referring to son's use of father's automobile on "various occasions," instead of habitual use.
N.C.—Grier v. Woodside, 158 S.E. 491, 200 N.C. 759.

Charge that, if the jury "believes" that the ambulance belonged to defendants, the driver was presumably defendants' authorized agent may be held not prejudicial, although not using the words "reasonably satisfied."
Ala.—Jefferson County Burial Soc. v. Cotton, 133 So. 256, 222 Ala. 578.
4 C.J. p 1032 note 36 [q].

Failure to give the full title of the statute, where a complete summary of the Motor Vehicle Bill of Sales Act was given in the trial court's charge, is harmless.
N.J.—Pollitt v. General Credit Corporation, 176 A. 607, 114 N.J.Law 432.

Inadvertent use of affirmative

Oversight of the court in instructions in requiring an affirmative answer to an interrogatory under defendant's evidence, instead of a negative answer, is not prejudicial where the jury could not have been misled.
Ariz.—Strahan v. Haynes, 262 P. 995, 33 Ariz. 128.

Inadvertent use of negative

In an action against an electric company for fire damage, the charge that, where the thing is shown to be under defendant's management and the accident is such as does not happen if proper care is used, a rebuttable presumption of negligence is raised, and that, when evidence on a point is introduced, the presumption is "not" functus officio and "drops out of sight," while possibly misleading in using "not," is not prejudicial.
Ala.—Alabama Power Co. v. Emens, 153 So. 729, 228 Ala. 466.

Colo.—National Surety Co. v. Queen

City Land & Mortgage Co., 164 P. 722, 63 Colo. 105.

Incorporating in instructions inapplicable provisions of statutes will not require reversal where no prejudice results to the complaining party.

Reading requested charges of both parties to the jury separately, although improper, is harmless unless the jury were misled.

Conn.—Bridgeport L. A. W. Corporation v. Levy, 147 A. 841, 110 Conn. 255.

Statement that charge was requested

While it is the duty of the court to give a proper requested charge in such manner that the jury will distinctly understand that it is approved by the court as a correct statement of the law, and it may not weaken its effect by any act or words creating the impression that it is given merely as representing counsel's view or contention, and not as its own interpretation of the law, the mere fact that it states it to have been requested is not prejudicial, when it is plainly stated to be a part of the court's instruction on the law.

A judgment will not be reversed for what is obviously a clerical or typographical error in an instruction where the jury were not misled.[26.5] Although such an error may be prejudicial and ground for reversal,[26.10] the transposition of the names, or an error in the designation, or description of the parties is not ground for reversal where such error in the instructions did not prejudice the complaining party or mislead the jury.[26.15] Where the jury are not misled, the improper use of "and" or "or" in an instruction will not require reversal.[26.20]

Reversible error cannot be predicated on the length, number, and detail of the instructions.[26.25]

Tendency to mislead

While slight verbal or technical inaccuracies not calculated to mislead will not vitiate the instructions, yet such a misuse of words, although only a clerical error, is ground for reversal, where it might have misled the jury, the test not being so much the precise wording, but whether it tended to mislead.

structions, such omissions will be regarded as harmless error.[26.30]

b. Using, or Referring Jury to, Pleadings

In the absence of prejudice, it is not reversible error for the court, in its instructions, to copy the pleadings read them to the jury, or refer the jury to the pleadings for the issues.

Whether an instruction referring the jury to the pleadings constitutes reversible error depends on whether or not prejudice and confusion are likely to result from such instruction.[26.50] While the practice is not to be commended, in the absence of prejudice a cause will not be reversed where the instruction states the issues by copying the pleadings,[27] or consists of a reading of them or a portion of them to the jury,[28] or where the instruction refers the jury to the pleading to ascertain the issues.[29] However, where prejudice results, it is reversible error for the instruction to set out the pleadings[30] or to refer the jury to the pleadings for the issues.[31]

§ 1763(3). —— Instructions on Burden of Proof and Preponderance of Evidence

Unless prejudicial, erroneous instructions as to the burden of proof and the necessity of a preponderance of the evidence do not require reversal, as where the burden is placed on the wrong party, or too great a burden is placed on the appellant, or the proper degree of proof is not required.

An erroneous instruction as to the burden of proof and the necessity of a preponderance of the evidence to sustain such burden is no cause for reversal where not prejudicial.[32] When, however, the Error in an instruction using the word "satisfaction," as applied to the preponderance of evidence required in an ordinary civil case, is fatal only when it appears that it did, or might reasonably have been supposed to, prejudice the jury.

Ariz.—Brown v. Jerrild, 239 P. 795, 29 Ariz. 121.

Instruction authorizing the jury to "require" defendants to prove claimed gift by a preponderance of evidence merely informed the jury upon whom the burden of proof lay, and could not have harmed defendants.

Instructions as to negligence

(1) Where no prejudice results, error in an instruction in an action for personal injuries, caused by negligence, that, to entitle plaintiff to recover, plaintiff was only required to make out her case "by a mere preponderance of the evidence" was not ground for reversing the judgment.

Ill.—Gebhardt v. Village of La Grange Park, 268 Ill.App. 556, reversed on other grounds 188 N.E. 372, 354 Ill. 234.

(2) An instruction embodying the res ipsa loquitur doctrine, modified to leave the ultimate burden of proving negligence on plaintiffs, is not prejudicial to defendants.

Cal.—Damgaard v. Oakland High School Dist. of Alameda County, 298 P. 983, 212 C. 316.

(3) Error, if any, in an instruction regarding the presumption that an unusually violent jerk of a street car injuring a passenger was due to the street railroad's negligence, placing the burden on defendant to show freedom from negligence, is not prejudicial.

Mo.—Crenshaw v. St. Louis Public Service Co., App., 52 S.W.2d 1035.

(4) In a case submitted under the humanitarian rule, defendant's instructions concerning the burden of proof and cautionary matters were held not unwarranted or prejudicial as a matter of law.

Mo.—Wolfson v. Cohen, 55 S.W.2d 677.

Instructions as to contributory negligence

(1) An instruction that the burden of proving contributory negligence is on the party alleging it is not reversible error.

Ala.—Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Davis, 137 So. 525, 223 Ala. 600.

Cal.—James v. Frazee, 288 P. 784, 209 C. 456.

Daniel v. Asbill, 276 P. 149, 97 C.A. 731.

(2) In the absence of evidence by plaintiff of contributory negligence when injured, refusal to modify an instruction that contributory negligence cannot be presumed but must be proved by defendant, by adding thereto the phrase "unless it was shown by evidence on behalf of plaintiff," is not prejudicial to defendant.

Ark.—Hope Basket Co. v. Hartsfield, 69 S.W.2d 1076, 189 Ark. 1.

Materiality of allegation

Instructing that an allegation that defendant's truck suddenly turned to the left causing plaintiff's automobile to run into a ditch was material is not reversible error.

Matter sufficiently material

An instruction permitting the jury to find negligence against either or both of defendants sued as joint tort-feasors conflicted on material matter with an instruction that, unless defendant employee was found negligent, the employer was not negligent, and was prejudicial error. Harmless conflict

In an action for insulting words, an instruction that the jury should give them their ordinary and popular meaning, and another that they must so construe them unless used in a different sense, are not necessarily in conflict, but, if conflicting,

ing party.[48]

§ 1764. Applicability to Issues and Evidence

a. Harmless error
b. Prejudicial error
c. Immaterial instructions

a. Harmless Error

In the absence of prejudice to the complaining party, the giving of abstract instructions or instructions not applicable to the issues and evidence will not require reversal.

Notwithstanding the general rule, discussed in Trial § 379, that it is improper to give an instruction announcing a naked legal proposition, however correct it may be, unless it bears on, and is connected with, the issues involved, and unless, further, there has been received some competent evidence to which the jury may apply it, the giving of instructions which are abstract or not authorized by, or applicable to, the pleadings and evidence will not constitute a ground for reversal, where no prejudice results to the complaining party; and this is so whether or not the instructions state correct rules of law.[49] harmless, where, applied to the facts in the case, both meant the same.

Impeachment of witnesses

Where no contradictory statements of a witness were proven, the giving of an instruction on impeachment

However erroneous the action of the court may be in permitting the jury, after they have separated, to reconsider and correct a verdict rendered, the court will not reverse unless there are some merits to the case.[33]

b. Prejudicial Error

It is error requiring reversal to give instructions inapplicable to the issues and the evidence where such instructions are prejudicial to the complaining party.

Where an instruction, not applicable to the issues and the evidence, is clearly calculated to mislead, or it appears that the jury have been influenced by it in reaching their verdict and that the complaining party was prejudiced, the giving of such instruction is reversible error.[34] of witnesses by previous contradictory statements, while inapplicable, was harmless.

Instruction as to survey

In an action involving a boundary dispute between adjoining owners, an instruction that the county surveyor's survey was prima facie evidence of the correct line, where the official record of such survey was not placed in the evidence, and the only evidence thereof was the county surveyor's oral testimony, is erroneous and prejudicial, there being no evidence to which the instruction could apply.

c. Immaterial Instructions

In the absence of prejudice the giving of an immaterial instruction, or an instruction on immaterial matters, is no ground for reversal.

An instruction, which is immaterial, or on an immaterial issue or question which could not have misled or confused the jury, constitutes no ground for reversal.[89]

§ 1766. —— Improper Assumption of Facts

Unless no prejudice results therefrom, the giving of an instruction which improperly assumes the existence of a material fact is a material error.

Ordinarily the assumption of a material fact where the evidence with regard to it is conflicting,[90] or where it is unsupported by any evidence,[91] will constitute ground for reversal. It is also a ground for reversal that the assumption of fact is in entire contradiction of all the evidence bearing on the fact assumed,[92] of the testimony of the successful party himself,[93] or of the issues made by the pleadings.[94] An instruction is erroneous and requires reversal where it is likely to mislead the jury into believing that the court had heard and remembered testimony during the trial which they had forgotten.[95]

The improper assumption of facts in an instruction will not be ground for reversal where it is apparent that the party complaining was not injured thereby,[96] as where the verdict in spite of an im-

dence contrary to the assumption;[7] or where the fact assumed appears to have been established by evidence of the party complaining,[8] or was admitted by him.[9]

Where the evidence, without substantial conflict, showed plaintiff's injury, and the case was tried solely on the question of damages, it is not prejudicial error that the court's instruction implied that a verdict for plaintiff was expected.[10]

§ 1767. —— Charging on Weight of Evidence

Except where no prejudice results therefrom, a charge indicating the opinion of the court as to the weight of the evidence is ordinarily reversible error.

Where such practice is forbidden by organic or statutory law, or where to do so would result in prejudice to the complaining party, it is a ground for reversal for the court to express an opinion on a material fact in charging the jury,[11] and the error is not rendered harmless because in so doing the court correctly stated the testimony.[12] So if evidence on a material issue is undisputed, it is prejudicial error for the court to suggest a doubt as to how such issue should be determined.[13]

On the other hand, the expression of an opinion on the facts by the court has been held not prejudicial where the court was warranted in taking the question from the jury;[14] where the evidence was almost or quite undisputed as to the existence of the General affirmative charge

(1) Where there is a question for the jury, an instruction on the measure of damages for conversion and the form of verdict in effect is a general affirmative charge for plaintiff and prejudicial.
Ala.—Lowery v. Cain, 117 So. 153, 22 Ala.App. 482.

(2) Where the evidence is uncontradicted, a statement amounting to nothing more than a general affirmative charge with hypothesis after the court stated its purpose to give general charge is not reversible error.

Minority of jury yielding to majority

An instruction specifically telling the jury that, if a majority of the jury was for defendant, the minority ought to doubt the correctness of its judgment, is prejudicial error.

fact on which the opinion was given;[15] where the expression of opinion in no way invades the province of the jury;[16] where the expression of opinion was on an immaterial matter;[17] where the opinion was favorable to the party complaining;[18] where the comment was a mere statement of a matter of common knowledge;[19] where the verdict was clearly not affected by it;[20] or where no other conclusion could have been arrived at on the evidence, and it is apparent that no harm could have resulted.[21]

Also there are decisions which hold that an expression of opinion on the weight of the evidence is cured, where the court subsequently tells the jury that it is their exclusive province to determine on the sufficiency or insufficiency of the evidence and that they are not bound by the opinion with regard thereto;[22] but the weight of authority is to the contrary.[23] A remark, in an instruction, that there was no evidence on a particular matter is prejudicial where the matter was admitted in the pleadings.[24]

§ 1768. Singling Out and Giving Undue Prominence to Issues, Theories, or Evidence

Where prejudice results, singling out and giving undue prominence to particular issues, theories, or portions of the evidence is reversible error.

Singling out and giving undue prominence to particular issues, theories, or portions of the evidence is improper and will operate to reverse when resulting in prejudice to the party complaining.[25] It is not a ground for reversal, however, if it is not likely to operate to the prejudice of appellant,[26] as

Reasonable comment

In an action for injuries, plaintiff having claimed a previous earning capacity of one hundred dollars weekly in an ice business, comment of the court as to the probability that, if the claim were correct, he would not have abandoned, but endeavored to have preserved, the business, is not prejudicial but a reasonable criticism.

Exceptional cases

Principle that frequent and unnecessary repetition of correct statements of law in instructions constitutes reversible error will be applied only in exceptional cases, and where from whole record reviewing court cannot fairly say that correct result was reached.

Repetition after correction

Where court had misread instruction, action of court in inserting omission and re-reading instruction after omission had been called to its attention was not error.

Determining factors

Error in frequently and unnecessarily repeating correct statements of the law in instructions is not prima facie prejudicial as it is where an instruction incorrectly states the law, but it becomes prejudicial by the quantum of the repetition and the relative importance of the issue emphasized; and the number of times an instruction correctly stating the law is repeated is not the criterion for determining whether the repetition constitutes reversible error, but it is rather the probable effect which that repetition will have on the jury's proper consideration of the evidence.

not entitle appellant to a reversal when there was a special verdict and the law was correctly applied to the facts,[39] the submission of a case on both a general charge and special questions is reversible error[40] unless it clearly appears that no injury resulted therefrom,[41] as where the evidence is conclusive or uncontradicted.[42] The giving of a general charge in a special issue case does not constitute reversible error unless it appears that it is unnecessary and is calculated to prejudice one of the parties before the jury.[42.5]

Admonitory instructions are not considered as general charges within the rule prohibiting the giving of such charges in cases submitted on special issues.[43]

written charge of the court to the jury, in lieu of specific instructions tendered by the parties, without complying with a statutory or court rule requirement that the charge be submitted to counsel on each side with opportunity to specify and object to any part thereof constitutes prejudicial error.[44.5]

b. Oral Instructions

Where written instructions are required, it is reversible error to instruct orally if prejudice results, or even, according to some authorities, in the absence of prejudice.

Where it is required by statute or rule of court that instructions shall be in writing and such statutes and rules of court are held to be mandatory, the giving of oral instructions is considered reversible error if prejudice results.[45] According to some decisions, noncompliance with the statute will constitute reversible error, even though no prejudice results.[46] Other decisions, however, reach the opposite conclusion.[47] There is no prejudicial error notwithstanding the court's refusal to give instructions in writing, where the instructions as delivered orally were taken down and transcribed by a stenographer, signed by the judge, and delivered to counsel before argument and also delivered to the jury.[48] Oral repetition of parts of written charges already given, and refusal to reduce them to writing has been held not prejudicial where written instructions were not requested.[49]

§ 1772. Instructions in Equity Cases

Error in instructions in equity cases, or where the verdict is purely advisory, is generally no cause for reversal.

In an equity case, or where the verdict is only advisory, error in instructing the jury is not reversible,[50] especially where the court exercised its independent judgment in making its own findings of fact.[51] The review on appeal includes both the law and the facts,[52] and, of course, where the verdict was manifestly for the right party the error is immaterial.[53]

It has been held, however, that, if on the trial of an issue out of chancery an instruction is given which is plainly erroneous and prejudicial, a decree based solely on the verdict into which the error and prejudice enter, and not on a consideration of the chancery record independent of the verdict, must be reversed.[54] Where there is a legal claim involved entitling appellant to damages, he may question the soundness of instructions as far as they bear on the legal issues.[55]

§ 1773(1). Error Cured by Verdict or Judgment

Where it is clear from the verdict that it is correct, and that no prejudice resulted from erroneous instructions, the rendition of such a verdict may be regarded as a cure of the errors.

Quoted in: Mont.—Maynard v. City of Helena, 160 P.2d 484, 488, 117 Mont. 402.

In order for an instruction to be prejudicially erroneous, the findings of the jury must give some reflection of that instruction.[55.50] Where it is apparent from the whole testimony that the verdict is correct on the merits, error committed by the trial court in the giving of instructions is harmless.[56]

The fact that the trial court gave an incorrect rule to an advisory jury which may have misled them could not be foundation for prejudicial error upon appeal, where the trial court in its opinion declared that such incorrect rule had been given to the jury, but the court then proceeded to make its findings under the evidence upon all the issues in view of such misdirection of the jury.

Technical defects

Where only fair inference from record was that jury found plaintiff and defendant negligent, so that neither could recover, complaints by plaintiff on appeal as to technical defects in the charge lost much of their force as grounds of reversible error.

to consider other issues, and having found as they did, had no occasion to consider the erroneous instruction,[63.30] or where the jury by their verdict found that the matter erroneously instructed on was not involved in the case, or that the conditions with respect to which the erroneous instructions were to be applied did not exist.[63.35] Further, an erroneous instruction is harmless where the verdict was returned under another instruction which was not erroneous.[63.40] Also, an error in an instruction is not prejudicial so as to require a reversal where the judgment entered was correct,[64] or where the court directed a verdict,[64.5] or entered a judgment notwithstanding the verdict,[64.10] or vacated a judgment against the complaining party and dismissed the action against him.[65]

Any error by instruction in permitting the jury to find in favor of or against any one or all of several defendants is rendered harmless by a general verdict against all of defendants;[66] and in a case in which liability has been established against at least some of several defendants, any error in charging that the jury could bring a verdict in favor of all of defendants is harmless where the jury brought in a verdict against one, or some, of defendants.[66.5] Any error in charging that the jury could find against two or more defendants in different amounts is rendered harmless where the jury returned a joint verdict against them.[66.10] Where plaintiff acquiesced in a verdict in favor of one or two codefendants, who, if liable, would be liable jointly and severally, error in the charge on concurrent negligence is harmless to the remaining defendant, and not a basis of reversible error.[66.15]

An error in instructing on the "fellow servant" doctrine is harmless if the undisputed evidence shows that such relation did not exist and the jury so find.[67] Error in failing to instruct that a code-

error in the charge which was harmful to plaintiff will require a reversal where a verdict for defendant was not demanded as a matter of law.[70.5] Where a cause was submitted to a jury by a principal instruction authorizing a recovery on an erroneous theory of the law, plaintiff on securing a verdict could not have it sustained on appeal and have the error declared harmless, because there was a theory which, if submitted, would have sustained a similar verdict.[71]

In an action in which acts by defendant's agents constitute the only possible basis of its liability and plaintiff relies, not on grounds of action which are distinct in the essential basis of the right involved, but rather only on the specific facts which formed a part of the transaction, a general verdict for plaintiff will not render harmless error in instructions with respect to defendant's liability for acts by codefendants as its agents.[71.5]

Where the court may instruct on its own motion, the giving of instructions at the request of plaintiff is not prejudicial to defendant, since he is in a position no worse than he would have been had the court given the instructions without any request by plaintiff's counsel.[71.10]

§ 1773(2). —— Amount of Recovery or Damages

Erroneous instructions as to the measure of damages or amount of recovery do not require reversal where by their verdict the jury show that they were not misled, and no prejudice has resulted to the complaining party.

Erroneous instructions as to the measure of damages or the amount of recovery do not constitute a ground for reversal where it is apparent that the jury were not influenced or misled thereby.[72] Ordi-

4 C.J. p 1045 note 50.

An erroneous instruction as to the controlling factors in determining the reasonable value of services sued for is not prejudicial where the jury found that their value was governed by an express contract.[80.5] The withdrawal of an item of damages from the jury is not prejudicial where the verdict is determinative that the basis on which it was claimed did not exist.[80.10] A failure to instruct that a quotient verdict is improper is not error where there is no showing that the verdict was arrived at in that manner.[80.15] Where there was no evidence to support the judgment, it is immaterial whether the court used the correct measure of damages in determining the amount of the judgment.[80.20]

Defendant is not prejudiced by an erroneous instruction on exemplary or punitive damages where no punitive damages were awarded by the jury,[80.25] or by an instruction erroneously authorizing exemplary or punitive damages, where compensatory damages only are allowed,[81] or where the jury determined the issue in favor of appellant,[81.5] or where the verdict was for defendant,[81.10] or where the jury find that no actual damages are recoverable,[82] or award a lump sum and defendant requests no separation of actual from punitive damages;[83] and error in an instruction with respect to the mitigation of exemplary damages is harmless where the jury found against plaintiff on the issue of actual damages.[84]

Similarly, an erroneous instruction permitting the jury to find nominal damages is harmless where the jury did not find such damages,[84.5] as where the jury found actual damages,[85] and a charge on nominal damages is not harmful to a plaintiff who

However, it has been held that, where the instruction states a wrong rule of damages, it requires reversal, notwithstanding a showing that the jurors did not follow such rule, but based their verdict on the correct rule.

failed to recover any damages.[86] Also, an erroneous instruction on nominal damages is harmless, where the verdict returned is authorized as a recovery of punitive damages and it appears that it was not returned as a verdict for nominal damages.[87] An instruction as to compensatory damages, permitting the jury to consider the pecuniary circumstances of defendant, is not prejudicially erroneous where the evidence supports the theory that punitive damages are allowable.[88]

On the other hand, error in instructing the jury on the measure of damages will be considered prejudicial error and a ground for reversal, where the instruction manifestly has a tendency to mislead the jury;[89] where it is impossible to determine on what basis the jury arrived at a verdict;[89.5] where the verdict appears excessive;[90] where the amount awarded is large, although not necessarily excessive;[91] where compensation for improper items was authorized and the damages awarded were substantial;[91.5] or where the damages assessed by the true rule might have been more or less than those assessed by the jury.[92] The mere fact that an erroneous or improper instruction deals with damages and the verdict is for defendant does not alone make the error or impropriety harmless.[92.5] In a

Error held not cured

Error of instruction in giving a false measure for actual damages in an action for fraud cannot be met by the fact that in such an action punitive damages may be awarded, as if, contrary to fact, such instruction had been given, it would not have cured the error.

When general rule not applicable

(1) General rule that a verdict for defendant renders harmless an error made in charges relating to elements and amounts of damages does not apply when a motion to strike has been erroneously granted and which prevents entire matter from being presented to jury.
Ala.—Steward v. Gold Medal Shows, 14 So.2d 549, 244 Ala. 583.

number of decisions the rule has been laid down that erroneous instructions are ground for reversal, unless it clearly appears from the whole record,[93] or unless the verdict shows,[94] that the jury were not misled. In an action in which contributory negligence operated to diminish, but not to bar, recovery, error in the instructions with respect to that issue will constitute prejudicial error, even though plaintiff recovered damages and the amount was not inadequate.[94.5]

§ 1773(3). —— By Special Findings or Findings on Special Issues

Error in instructions is generally regarded as cured where the special findings, or findings on one of a number of issues, show that the appellant was not injured. The authorities are divided on whether or not error in instructions with respect to one of two issues, either of which may be determinative of the case, is prejudicial and will require a reversal where a general verdict is brought in, making it impossible to determine on which of the issues the verdict was founded.

Error in an instruction will be deemed harmless where special findings by the jury,[95] or a finding by them on one of a number of issues,[96] show that appellant was not injured thereby. Thus, where the jury returned its verdict on an issue with respect to which there was no error, error in instructions on other issues is harmless and will not constitute reversible error.[96.5]

Error in instructions with respect to the issue of contributory negligence is harmless where defendant was found not guilty of any actionable negligence,[96.10] or where the verdict of no cause of action is supported by substantial evidence;[96.15] and error in instructions on the issue of last clear chance is harmless where the jury found the person injured was not guilty of negligence,[96.20] or where the verdict was for defendant.[96.25] Moreover, error in submitting the defensive issue of sudden emergency is harmless to plaintiff where defendant was found not negligent,[96.30] or to a defendant who cross-claimed, where the sole cause of the accident was found to be the negligence of an unidentified person.[96.35] Also, where the trial court directed a verdict, or entered judgment, on the answers to special questions, error in the instructions on broad-

Plaintiffs, who relied on theory of absolute liability, could not complain on appeal that instructions on negligence were given as well as instructions on absolute liability, where jury found against plaintiffs on issues framed by themselves.

er issues of liability are immaterial.[96.40] A verdict finding plaintiff negligent renders error in failing to charge all possible negligent acts of defendant harmless.[96.45] Nevertheless, error in an instruction is not cured by special findings, where such findings indicate that the jury followed the instruction in their general verdict.[97]

Error in a charge on one count of a declaration or complaint may be disregarded if the verdict may be sustained on another count,[98] as where the answers of the jury to interrogatories establish that defendant was found liable on both counts of the complaint;[98.5] and even though the evidence may not be sufficient to sustain a cause of action or defense to which an instruction applies, a reversal may not be had on that ground if the evidence as to the other causes of action or defenses is sufficient to sustain the verdict.[98.10]

General verdict returned on two or more issues. The authorities are divided on whether or not error in instructions with respect to one of two or more issues, each of which may be determinative of the case, is prejudicial and will require a reversal, where a general verdict is brought in making it impossible to determine on which of the issues the verdict is founded. The more general rule is that such error is prejudicial and will require a reversal of the case, even though there is no error in the instructions with respect to the other issue or issues.[99] Under this rule it is held in an action for negligence that error in the charge solely as to defendant's negligence is prejudicial,[99.5] and also that error in the charge as to contributory negligence is prejudicial and will cause a reversal, even though no error was committed in the charge on the issue of defendant's negligence.[99.10]

On the other hand, there is authority that error in instructions with respect to one of two or more issues, each of which may be determinative of the case, is harmless and will be disregarded, where a general verdict is returned.[99.15] In some of these jurisdictions, the error in the instructions may be with respect to one of several grounds of action or defenses, and whether the general verdict is for plaintiff or defendant.[99.20] Under this view, a general verdict for plaintiff which can be sustained under one count or cause of action will not be disturbed, regardless of error in instructions as to another count or cause of action;[1] and, where one cause of action is correctly submitted, and the damages to be awarded would be the same whether plaintiff recovered on one or both counts, a general verdict for plaintiff renders inconsequential any defects in the submission of other issues.[2]

In other of these jurisdictions, this two-issue or general verdict rule, which is a rule of policy, intended to simplify the work of trial courts and to limit the range of error proceedings,[2.5] applies only where the verdict or judgment is for the defense, and not where it is for plaintiff.[2.10] Under this and the preceding view, where two or more separate and distinct issues or defenses are submitted, and a general verdict for defendant is returned without a request for special findings, errors in instructions as to one issue will not be held prejudicial where a finding on either of the issues entitles defendant to judgment.[3]

In its application the two-issue rule has a number of limitations. It has been held restricted to erroneous instructions to the jury, and not applicable to errors relating to the admission or rejection of evidence.[3.5] In order for it to apply the issues or defenses must be separate and distinct,[3.10] and neither must be an element of, or dependent on, the other.[3.15] If two issues constitute a primary and a secondary issue, the rule is applied only if the primary issue is properly submitted.[3.20] The rule

Statements of rule

(1) The two-issue rule is that error in the charge of the court dealing exclusively with one of two or more complete and independent issues required to be presented to the jury will be disregarded if the charge with respect to another independent issue which will support the verdict of the jury is free from prejudicial error, unless it is disclosed by interrogatories or otherwise that the verdict is in fact based on the issue to which the erroneous instruction related.

And where a single determinative issue has been presented free from error, error in presenting another issue will be disregarded."

does not apply when there are errors in the instructions as to both or all issues,[4] or where the erroneous charge, as given, disposed of both issues.[4.5]

It is also held that the two-issue rule does not apply to separately stated specifications of negligence involving a single cause of action and damage,[5] or to different elements or items of damage resulting from a single tortious act,[5.5] or where the complaint sets up a single basis of recovery, the negligence of defendant, and then alleges different particulars of negligence.[5.10] The two-issue rule applies only where it cannot be determined on which issue the verdict was predicated.[6]

If prejudicial error is committed in submitting an issue which was clearly determined against plaintiff, the verdict will not be sustained although there may also have been a finding against plaintiff on some other issue submitted without error.[7] In an action based on negligence, where the issue of negligence is correctly submitted but an error occurs in the submission of an issue of contributory negligence, a verdict for defendant may stand because it may rest on a finding of no negligence;[7.5] but it has been held, although there is authority to the contrary,[7.10] that error in the charge of the court on the issue of negligence prejudicial to plaintiff will invalidate a verdict for defendant, even though there was no error in the charge on the issue of contributory negligence.[7.15] It has also been held that where the issues raised under the claims of proof were negligence and creation of a nuisance, a general verdict in favor of defendant does not render harmless error in instructing on the principles of law applicable to one of the issues.[7.20]

Findings. Error in the instructions given may be cured by the findings of the court, where the jury acted only in an advisory capacity.[7.25]

correct instructions setting forth the theory of a party's case which there is evidence to support,[12] or where the evidence was conflicting and the verdict general, and it was not possible to say how the jury would have resolved the question if the requested instruction had been given.[13]

The refusal to give a proper instruction is not rendered harmless by admissions made in a motion for a new trial[14] or by the fact that the issue on which the charge was asked below is not urged on appeal.[15]

Applying these rules, judgments have been reversed for prejudicial error in failing or refusing to give instructions in actions: On contracts;[16] for versible error—Stewart v. Coats, Civ.App., 91 S.W.2d 421—Panhandle & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Napier, Civ. App., 90 S.W2d 926, error dismissed—Dallas Ry. & Terminal Co. v. Request not timely Mo.—Zamora v. Woodmen of the World Life Ins. Soc., App., 157 S.W.2d 601.

Refused requests not designated

Where there was a general finding for defendant, without indicating which of plaintiff's requests, including one which should have been given, was refused, an exception to the refusal to give such requests would be sustained, although another defense was made out.

Mass.—City of Fall River v. Ætna Ins. Co., 107 N.E. 367, 219 Mass. 454.

Request for instructions by jury

Error in giving and refusing to give instructions was prejudicial where jurors, after they retired, returned and sought further instructions on the same subject matter, and their vote in arriving at their verdict was close.

b. Harmless Error

A refusal of proper instructions is not ground for reversal where appellant is not prejudiced thereby.

Appellant cannot complain of the refusal of instructions where no prejudice resulted from such refusal,[86] as, for example, in those cases where the instruction requested by the appellant is already

Argumentative and abstract instructions

Refusal of argumentative and abstract instructions, stating correct principles, but not the result of such principles on the jury's findings of fact is not reversible error.

Ala.—Johnson v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 127 So. 216, 220 Ala. 649.

Failure to mark "Refused"

Where appellant's requested instruction was erroneous, and there was no dispute that the trial court refused it, appellant was not injured because the court failed to mark it "Refused," as provided by statute.

Ariz.—Red Rover Copper Co. v. Hillis, 185 P. 641, 21 Ariz. 87, rehearing denied 187 P. 576, 21 Ariz. 258.

Refusing time to prepare

The refusal of the court to give a party a reasonable time within which to prepare instructions which he thought he was entitled to, was harmless, where any instructions which the party desired to prepare were not proper.

Ky.—Miller v. Barnes, 205 S.W. 549, 181 Ky. 473.

Proper instruction

The fact that a requested instruction was one which the court might appropriately have given does not of itself establish that it was prejudicial error to refuse such instruction.

Mo.—Hoffman v. Philip A. Rohan Boat, Boiler & Tank Co., App., 294 S.W. 758—Jeffries v. Walsh Fire Clay Products Co., App., 233 S.W. 259.

Nondirection

Failure of plaintiff to request, and of the court to give, instructions for plaintiff other than on the measure of damages constitutes nondirection and is not error prejudicial to defendant.

Finding demanded as a matter of law

In action on life policy where a finding was demanded as a matter of law under the evidence that plaintiff had an insurable interest in life of insured, who was her stepson, failure to charge jury on law of insurable interest was not prejudicial error.

er,[37.5] where the case should not have been submitted to the jury,[37.10] where the issues presented by the requested instructions were eliminated by the court in favor of appellants,[37.15] or where the court gave the charge after its attention was called to the omission.[38]

Likewise there is no prejudice requiring a reversal where the instruction would not have been of any practical value to,[39] or would have confused or misled,[39.5] the jury, where the instruction consisted merely of factual comment,[39.10] where the instructions, if given, would not have changed the verdict,[40] or where there is only a remote possibility that the result would have been changed by the giving of the instruction.[41]

There is no prejudice requiring reversal where the instruction was against appellant's interest,[42] where special questions were submitted to the jury, which fully covered the matter contained in the instruction refused,[43] where there was no evidence on which to base the instruction,[44] where the instruc-

Withdrawal of instruction

Anything which promotes or encourages brevity in the records of courts is to be encouraged, and hence, where the court, as requested, in its first and second instruction defined preponderance of the evidence in the same language, but later withdrew instruction No. 1, the avoidance of such repetition of definition was not reversible error as against a contention that the withdrawal of the instruction prejudicially affected the minds of the jury.
Mo.—La Hue v. Bungenstock, 249 S.W. 402, 297 Mo. 577.

Striking part of instruction

Where plaintiff in error admitted that the act of the court in striking part of an instruction offered by him left the substance practically intact, the error, if any, was harmless.

Matters clearly understood by jury

In an action for assault, where the testimony and instructions showed that the jury clearly understood which of two assaults was relied on for recovery, the refusal to instruct that a second assault could not be so relied on was not prejudicial error.

charges the reason for their refusal, although a work of supererogation, does not operate prejudicially to the party requesting the instruction.[67]

§ 1775. —— Cautionary Instructions

Generally the refusal of cautionary instructions cannot be assigned as error, although when it is probable that appellant was prejudiced thereby the judgment will be reversed.

The giving of cautionary instructions stands on a different footing from the giving of instructions on the law of the case and is a matter very much within the discretion of the court.[68] It is generally held that their refusal cannot ordinarily be assigned as error.[69]

This principle has been applied with respect to instructions cautioning the jury that the answers given by them when examined by counsel touching their qualifications are binding on them until discharged from the case;[70] or instructing them that a witness false in part of his testimony is to be distrusted in other parts, and that his testimony may be disregarded;[71] or directing them to disregard improper argument of counsel;[72] or cautioning against prejudice, sympathy, or a different treatment of individuals and corporations;[73] or stating that verbal admissions should be received with caution;[74] or stating that there is no evidence on a certain issue, although such is the case;[75] or directing the jury that they should not bring in a verdict arrived at by lot or chance[76] or fix the amount of damages by adding together the sums found by the individual jurors, and then dividing the total by the number of jurors.[77]

So the rule applies to the refusal or failure to give instructions as to the burden of proof,[78] the credi-

(2) Refusal of a charge prohibiting the recovery of nominal damages, recoverable under the pleadings and evidence is not prejudicial error, although no substantial amount is shown.

Punitive damages

Where plaintiff in libel action remitted that part of the judgment representing award of punitive damages, as a condition to avoiding grant of new trial, and defendant appealed, questions concerning punitive damages were moot, and alleged error in refusing instructions on punitive damages was not prejudicial.

the verdict;[87.5] and it has been held that refusal of a requested instruction that the jury had a right to infer, from the failure of one defendant to testify that his testimony would be unfavorable to his own and another defendant's defense, was prejudicial error.[88]

It has also been held that, in an action for personal injuries, the refusal of the court to instruct that the mere fact that defendants have introduced no evidence by way of defense should not raise the presumption in the minds of the jury of the guilt of defendants, but that plaintiff is held to the same strictness of proof of the allegations as if defendants had introduced evidence, is prejudicial error.[89]

§ 1776. —— Error Cured by Verdict or Judgment

a. In general
b. Amount of damages

a. In General

Where the verdict shows that no injury resulted to the appellant thereby, the refusal of a request for an instruction is harmless.

Refusal to give proper instructions requested is harmless, where the verdict shows that no injury resulted therefrom,[90] as where the verdict was in appellant's favor,[90.5] the issue to which the refused instruction related is found in appellant's favor,[91] or

Finding disregarded or set aside

(1) Appellants cannot complain of a refusal to charge in a suit in equity where the jury's verdict favored them, notwithstanding the verdict was disregarded by the court.
Cal.—Simon Newman Co. v. Woods, 259 P. 460, 85 C.A. 360.

(2) Plaintiff, seeking reversal of a judgment, entered for defendant after setting aside a verdict for plaintiff, was not prejudiced by the refusal of instructions.
Va.—Young v. Dyer, 170 S.E. 737, 161 Va. 434.

Finding of court

(1) Refusing defendant's requested charges as to plaintiff's negligence was not prejudicial, where the court found plaintiff negligent as a matter of law.
Wis.—Wussow v. Badger State Bank of Milwaukee, 234 N.W. 720, 204 Wis. 467, rehearing denied 236 N. W. 687, 204 Wis. 467.

(2) In action for death of motorist struck by train at crossing, refusal of requested charge which asserted the law correctly with respect to contributory negligence was not prejudicial error, where court ruled that motorist was contributorily negligent, thereby precluding a recovery as for initial negligence of the defendant.
Ala.—Pollard v. Crowder, 194 So. 161, 239 Ala. 112.

Issue not decided adversely

Where instructions offered by defendant appellant and refused by the court relate to the alleged damages during a certain period, if the jury did not find any damages for that period, it is unnecessary to examine the instructions offered by appellant on that point.

Cure by amount of verdict

In trover for grain and cotton bought from one alleged to be a cropper under plaintiff, and hence without title to the property sold, failure to instruct that the cropper would have had title to a part of the grain, if it had been divided, is not prejudicial to defendant where the amount of the verdict shows that no recovery was allowed as to such grain.

Judgment corrected

In suit on note given for merchandise with defense of partial failure of consideration, where defendant ad-

dence;[95.5] where no other conclusion could be reached on the evidence;[96] where appellee was entitled to a directed verdict;[97] where the court on the whole evidence correctly instructed the jury to find for appellee;[98] or where appellant would not be entitled to recover in any event.[99]

Where the verdict eliminated consideration of the question to which the requested instruction was directed, its refusal is not ground for reversal,[1] as where a finding on one issue rendered the issue on which the requested instruction was based immaterial,[2] or negatived the facts on which the refused mitted receiving all the merchandise except a small item, failure of trial court to charge on partial failure of consideration was harmless, where the judge of superior court wrote the amount of the item off the judgment.

instruction was predicated,[3] or where findings of the jury are only advisory and the court has made independent findings on the same evidence and has rendered judgment thereon.[4]

A finding that defendant was negligent and plaintiff was not does not cure error in refusing to charge on the issue of proximate cause.[5] A verdict allowing punitive damages in an action for false arrest and imprisonment, under an instruction that, if defendant had reasonable cause to believe plaintiff committed the theft, no punitive damages should be allowed, is not an implied finding that plaintiff was not guilty curing error in refusing defendant's requested charge that, if plaintiff was guilty of the theft, he could not recover.[6] A verdict for only a part of the compensation claimed under an employment contract does not establish that it was based only on compensation found to have become due within the applicable statute of limitations so as to render the denial of instructions as to the statute nonprejudicial.[6.5]

b. Amount of Damages

The judgment will not be reversed where error in refusing to charge on the measure of damages is cured by the verdict.

Error in refusing to charge on the measure of damages is not prejudicial where the jury do not find any damages to have been suffered,[6.50] as where

Nominal damages

Error in failing to submit the issue of nominal damages for an admitted trespass to the jury does not require retrial, where on the issue of substantial damages the jury found in defendant's favor. In such case the verdict will be reversed and the cause remanded with directions to the trial court to enter a judgment in plaintiff's favor for a sum not exceeding one dollar.

Burden of proof

Where insured and her witness testified that articles of furniture insured under a fire policy were in fine condition when destroyed, and were in the same condition as when insured, and the value fixed in the policy was one thousand five hundred dollars, and the verdict was for nine hundred eighty-seven dollars, defendant insurer could not complain of the refusal of an instruction placing the burden of proving such value on insured.

Moreover, error in refusing to charge on the measure of damages is not prejudicial where only nominal damages are recoverable on the evidence,[12] where the verdict eliminates consideration of the question to which the requested instruction is directed,[12.5] where the evidence is confined to specific items and the instructions restrict the jury to the consideration of such items,[13] or where the error is cured by remittitur,[13.5] or by action of the court[14] or successful party[15] in reducing the amount of the verdict.

Likewise a refusal to limit the amount of damages recoverable to the amount demanded by the complaint is not prejudicial error where the award is for less than, or not in excess of, what might have been recovered under the complaint;[16] and a refusal of charges prohibiting recovery for certain items is not reversible error where it does not appear that any substantial amount for such items is included in the verdict.[17]

So, where it is manifest from the amount of the verdict that the jury did not include exemplary or punitive damages, the error, if any, in refusing to give a charge excluding a finding for such damages is harmless;[18] and where, under the evidence, punitive damages are not recoverable, the refusal of a request to charge on that subject is not prejudicial.[19] Similarly, it has been held that any error in the refusal to submit the question of the right to punitive damages is harmless where the jury awarded no damages,[19.5] although it has been held that, where defendant sought to recover only punitive damages, error of the court in failing to instruct the jury as to the measure of such damages was prejudicial notwithstanding the finding was against defendant, since the failure to instruct may have entered into, and affected the finding of, the jury on the question of liability or nonliability of plaintiff.[19.10]

Error in omitting an instruction on the measure of damages based on defendant's version of the facts is harmless, where the jury accepted plaintiff's version.[20]

In an action by a father to recover damages caused him as the result of injuries sustained by his son through defendant's negligence, failure to limit, in the instruction, the amount of plaintiff's recovery for special damages to an amount within the pleadings and evidence, was held not reversible error, where the amount of the special damages proven did not exceed the amount specified in the pleadings.

Set-off and recoupment

Where the verdict is for nominal damages, the refusal of instructions that, in determining the amount of damages recoverable, the jury should take into consideration facts in evidence which tend to show that appellant was entitled to substantial damages is error.[21] So also the refusal of an instruction enunciating a correct rule for measuring damages is not harmless error, where it appears that the jury estimated the damages by a different rule[22] or where the damages awarded were excessive;[23] and error in refusing a correct instruction that plaintiff is not entitled to recover any damages on a certain ground is prejudicial, where it cannot be determined what part of the actual damages allowed by the jury was based on that ground.[24]

Refusal of a proper charge that no recovery can be had for punitive damages is prejudicially erroneous where the court is unable to say whether or not any punitive damages were included in the verdict.[25] The refusal to define "malice," used in an instruction on exemplary damages, has been held not cured by the jury's answer, to a special issue, that the act complained of was willful and deliberate.[25.5]

Error consisting in instructing as to measure of damages, if the personal injuries in suit were permanent, but omitting to instruct as to measure of damages, if the injuries were not permanent, was held reversible, even though the motion for new trial did not allege that the damages awarded were excessive.[26]

§ 1777. Modification of Instructions

A judgment will not be reversed for erroneous modification of an instruction where no prejudice could have resulted.

Although a modification made is erroneous, the judgment will not be reversed where no prejudice could have resulted;[27] and where a requested in-measure of damages was harmless, where the verdict was for plaintiff.

Jury not misled

Where plaintiff sued on ten causes of action on implied contract to three of which the defense of express contract was interposed, it was not prejudicial error for the court, when defendant requested three similar instructions relating to each of those counts, to give the first instruction only, modified to refer to the causes of action generally, even if the instruction as modified was not technically accurate, since the jury could not have failed to understand that the instruction related only to the causes in which the defense of express contract was interposed.
Mont.—Baldwin v. Silver, 193 P. 750, 58 Mont. 495.

Unnecessary modification

In an action for personal injuries resulting from a collision between a stage and plaintiff's truck, stopped partially on the highway, it was not prejudicial error to add an unnecessary statement that plaintiff contended that he had a red light in place of the white light, to defendant's requested instruction given, in substance, that the absence of a white light required by law on the left rear side was negligence, and, if such negligence contributed to the collision, plaintiff could not recover.

Modification after reading request

Where the court read appellant's request to the jury and then instructed them to disregard the last two lines, the jury not having the request before them, the error, if any, was harmless; appellant got the benefit of the whole request.
S.C.—Matthews v. Payne, 113 S.E. 381, 121 S.C. 84, affirmed 44 S.Ct. 179, 263 U.S. 686, 68 L.Ed. 506.

While the practice of modifying instructions by erasures and interlineations has been criticized by reviewing courts, it is not reversible error where no harm results therefrom.
Ill.—Smith v. Stover Mfg. Co., 205 Ill.App. 169.

Modification of request

An instruction that plaintiff automobile guest and defendant drivers were the only parties interested in an action for injuries resulting from an automobile accident, which modified a requested instruction that no insurance company was interested in struction is erroneous and should have been refused, a modification thereof, although itself wrong, is not a ground for reversal,[28] at least if the modification frees the instruction from some of its faults.[29] So modification of appellant's requested instruction presenting a correct statement of law is not prejudicial, where the instruction as given was a complete statement of the law and was as favorable to appellant as the original instruction.[30] Further it has been held that, where a requested instruction as modified by the court correctly applied the law to the facts, it was not reversible error for the court to state that the instruction was requested.[31]

On the other hand, it is prejudicial error to modify a correct instruction on a material point,[32] as, for instance, by assuming, as in dispute, material facts as to which there is no controversy.[33] So prejudicial error is committed by adding to an instruction on one point of the case words directing the jury as to other branches of the case,[34] by practically eliminating the main defense presented thereby,[35] by adding words which practically nullify the original instruction,[36] or by submitting other matters of inducement merely, and not of the substance of the charge, and which, if true, would make a different cause of action, especially where there was no proof of such other matter.[37]

Manner of submitting modified instruction. Submission to the jury of an original requested instruction adopted by the court with a portion so stricken by the court as to leave the whole legible, while not commendable, was not prejudicial error, where the instruction as modified conformed to the instructions given by the court.[38]

Refusal to modify. Refusal to modify an instruction, even though the requested modification could properly have been made, is not reversible error where appellant was not prejudiced thereby, as where the instruction given sufficiently covered the point raised by the request for modification.[39]
